Text of C. I. A. Chief's Report on Powers

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 6—Following are the text of a summary by John A. McCone, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, of the results of the agency's interrogation of Francis Gary Powers, and excerpts from the statement made today by Mr. Powers at a hearing of the Senate Armed Services Committee:

Statement by C. I. A.

Since his return from imprisonment by Soviet Russia, Francis Gary Powers has undergone a most intensive debriefing by C. I. A. and other intelligence specialists, aeronautical technicians, and othere xperts concerned with various aspects of his mission and subsequent capture.

They Try to Converse

These men tried to talk to me and I would just shake my head and indicate that I couldn't understand them.

One of them pointed at me and held up two fingers, and I got the impression that he was asking if there were two of us, and I told him no, just shook my head no, and pointed to myself and held up one finger telling him that I was alone. And then he pointed up in the air and I looked up and saw what I think was a parachute, but I knew that I had no other parachute on board the aircraft.

I knew that it was no one that I knew, so I was [illegible] interested at the time. They didn't pay too much attention to this. They just talked among themselves, one on each side of me caught my arm and led me to this car that I had seen earlier. They put me in the car in the [illegible] seat next to the driver and with a man on my right, and there were three, I believe, in the back seat. They had load- [illegible] up the parachute, and I [illegible]nk my survival pack, in the [illegible] Soviet Union, Russian ru- [illegible]bles and several other items [illegible] my survival pack or [illegible] any person with maps of [illegible] the packages that [illegible] course, but they [illegible] know here I was, [illegible] a story there [illegible] place. Mr. Hodges said that he would have that contention checked.

The Secretary was one of a panel of four Government officials who spoke to the Advertising Council and submitted to questions by Mr. Biggers and three other council members.

Incentives Questioned

Clarence Francis, a corporatio nexecutive for many years, questioned whethed the Administration would achieve its expansion and growth goal of 4½ per cent a year "with no more incentive than is offered to date."

Dr. Walter W. Heller, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, to whom the question was addressed, said [illegible] counting heavily [illegible] productivity. This he only [illegible]
