>USSR/SPY>RATHER: Something else the Soviet public isn't privy >SATELLITE>to: While Moscow is complaining early and often about next week's U.S. space shuttle launch of a new American spy satellite, there's been not so much as a public peep from the Kremlin about its own new spy in the sky. Aviation Week magazine reports today that the Soviets put up a big new intelligence-gathering satellite Sept. 28. It passes over the United States frequently. It monitors, among other things, public and private radio communications. <
