[redacted]

[redacted] Subject was not certain but said she knew of approximately seven persons who were so aided by Rome. In one instance she could furnish the following details. Once at the behest of Major Bell who in turn had received the request from someone in Salzburg, Rome hid two Germans in the trunk of his car and smuggled them into Italy from Innsbruck via the Brenner Pass. These two persons she described as Nazis, who, during the war, had been members of the German delegation to the Vatican. They were named (spelling uncertain) [illegible] (fm) and [illegible] (fm). She believed that there was had been of some assistance to the Americans and that in repayment for their services the Americans aided their return to Italy from whence they skipped to South America.
