MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Training

John:

I showed General Cabell the film "Academy Anonymous" on 6 April 1966. He was very complimentary of the film in general but had two constructive comments for our consideration.

First, General Cabell thought that the title "Academy Anonymous" was most unfortunate and felt there is a real danger that this installation might become known as The Academy Anonymus. He felt that a less revealing title would be highly desirable.

Second, he regarded the scene of an agent being picked up by a convertible automobile as quite unlikely, feeling that an agent would not use such a conspicuous and open automobile for a clandestine meeting. To a slightly lesser degree, he felt it was unfortunate that the convertible was used for the students leaving the gate.

I am sure you will accumulate many other constructive suggestions as you show this film from time to time, and these are merely intended to be added to your collection for whatever they are worth.
