c. ROWAN, Richard W., with Robert Deindorfer. Secret Service: Thirty-three Centuries of Espionage. (Hawthorn Books, October publication). This updated reissue of the late Richard Rowan's interesting history of espionage contains an introduction by Allen Dulles.

d. ALLILUYEVA, Svetlana. Twenty Letters to a Friend. (Harper & Row). Advance copies of this book, scheduled for October publication, are now available. It will also be issued in a Russian edition.

e. TULLY, Andrew. White Tie and Dagger. (Morrow, October publication). Tully's book will describe Washington's Embassy Row and may get in some CIA references.

f. The Editors of Ramparts. The CIA File. (McGraw-Hill). This book is still carried with an October 27 publication date which appears dubious. The blurb claims that the book contains over 80% of previously unpublished material and "tells about the ways in which CIA has infiltrated countless independent organizations." It is noted that national advertising and promotion will be undertaken, as well as a special TV and radio campaign.

g. WISE, David and Thomas Ross. The Espionage Establishment. (Random House, November 13). The blurb announces that the book "examines modern espionage practices in sometimes startling detail. Much of the material ... has been previously secret" according to the publishers. The intelligence operations of Russia, Great Britain, the United States and Communist China are treated. The first printing will consist of 35,000 copies.

h. DULLES, Allen W. Great True Spy Adventures. (Harper & Row). This anthology, with an introductory essay and prefatory remarks for each section and each selection by Mr. Dulles, is scheduled for February 1968 publication.

i. KIRKPATRICK, Lyman B., Jr. The Real CIA. (Macmillan). This book is now scheduled for January 1968 publication.
