Dear Sir:

When I was in Austin in November of 1958, I stopped at the University Drug Store to phone one of my friends living near the university campus. After dialing his telephone number, a statement was made by the telephone company there in Austin that the telephone service where he lived had been discontinued. I left the drug store and walked four blocks to a Big Stand Restaurant where I again dialed the telephone number of my friend. Immediately I contacted him and talked to him quite awhile over the phone before visiting him fifteen minutes later. In my opinion, the telephone service in Austin, Texas should be carefully scrutinized by the F.C.C.
