Dear Allen,

Many thanks for your letter of October 4. I was sorry to have missed the chance of seeing you while I was in Washington, and I should really have written to you earlier to let you know that I was going to be there. However, I did not do so as my programme was fairly full for the three days and I thought I would take a chance of trying to contact you when I was disengaged. The next time I come down that way I will drop you a note in advance.

I heard from the Embassy that you had only just returned from Europe. I hope you had a good rest and I wondered whether you had seen our mutual friend Van.

I am quite enjoying life in [redacted], although naturally it is mentally less challenging than my old job. However, it is quite a pleasant change not to be involved in all the international crises and have to burn the midnight oil.

Dear Sir James:

I was sorry to have missed your call the other day, but I was away from the office attending the Anzus meetings, which went on all day. When you are next in Washington, please give me a call and we will hope for better luck in getting together.

Sincerely,

Allen W. Dulles
Director
