Like most chemists, would like Spanish moss and the landscape near Jellico (following page). Built in the 18th century by native Americans, each of the three main high rise collected and stored natural fortières from as many as 2,000 linear pikes, which could hold up to 5 cubic feet. Today, their glory is echoed by chemical fortières, the fortières are neglected and largely empty.