UK/RHODESIA: Britain's latest initiative to revive the Rhodesian negotiations is unlikely to get very far.

The British proposals call for expeditious negotiations on the shape of a new Rhodesian government, a transition period of no more than two years leading to majority rule, financial security for civil servants staying on after independence, and aid to non-Africans who feel compelled to leave Rhodesia.

Smith is almost certain to reject the proposals unless Prime Minister Vorster publicly conditions further South African support on a renewal of negotiations.
