It has just occurred to me that you may wish to have some concrete example of the manner in which CIA operatives have collaborated with military operational personnel -- of relatively recent date, which would have particular significance to the Navy. If so, I should think that you could with propriety and security discuss some of the details of the story of the intelligence effort which lay behind the successful Inchon landings, for which CIA was officially commended by the Navy. The gist of this story is to be found in my memorandum of conversation with Bill Quinn, dated September 3, which I have had checked out and find to be in all respects accurate and supported by our own records -- the file is attached for your reference. F.
