France: Considering a Broader Mission in Rwanda

French officials reportedly agree that their military operation in Rwanda is primarily intended to stop the massacres, [redacted] Paris has begun to consider long-term efforts to end the fighting. [redacted]

- President Mitterrand and Foreign Minister Juppe strongly advocated intervention, but Prime Minister Balladur and Defense Minister Leotard were concerned about being drawn into the fighting.
- Senior French military officers and diplomats say that the Rwandan Army is on the verge of collapse [redacted] but it may be in less disarray than the French say.
- French diplomats are also expressing fear that the French will not be able to withdraw at the end of the month because the UN peacekeepers will not be ready. [redacted]
