Dear Mr. Nitze:

We are grateful to you for having made your services available to our organization in a consultant capacity in the past, and we hope that we can count on your continued interest and support for another fiscal year.

To assure this, we would like to have you extend your Personal Service Contract with the Central Intelligence Agency, [redacted] dated 21 January 1954, which expires 30 June 1955. This letter will serve as the official extension of that contract through 30 June 1956, subject to the availability of an appropriation for the functions of the Agency. As you know, inasmuch as you are serving in an intermittent capacity, you are not entitled to the regular United States Government leave and retirement benefits.

To complete the record, it is essential that we have on file a signed statement from you acknowledging the acceptance of this extension. I ask, therefore, that you sign and return the attached copy of this letter at your earliest convenience.

Your interest in the mission of this Agency is keenly appreciated, and we look forward to the renewal of your association with us.

Sincerely,

Harrison G. Reynolds
Director of Personnel
