Remarks:

Meissner has a long Nazi record both as the son of Otto Meissner and as a Ribbentrop Foreign Office man.

A high-ranking U.S. official made the following statement: "I have known Meissner since Moscow in 1940 where he was generally regarded as Ribbentrop agent in the German Embassy. He has recently written a highly questionable volume "So Beats Germany's Heart" which depicts him as anti-Nazi. However, in one personal conversation I had with him he seems to have changed little. He does not enjoy a very good reputation in Munich but is apparently on good terms with the Italian Consulate, where I met him. He strikes me as a rather odious individual." 1/

As a free-lance contributor to "Revue" he is reported to receive up to 1000 DM per month and to have an automobile at his disposal. He is reported to represent a very national tendency and is alleged to be a national propagandist and "sign board" for "Revue". "Revue" is alleged to be the pay office for certain national circles. Meissner is also reputed to have close contact with inmates of the Hochenasberg internment camp in which certain of the National Socialist elite were together. 2/

Meissner is trying by every means to re-enter the German Foreign Office and is apparently receiving support in his efforts. 2/ It is not yet known whether this support comes from present Foreign Office circles.

Until October 1951 he lived in a trailer at Neuhaus near Schliersee, Upper Bavaria, on his father's estate which is now occupied by refugees. His father, who was acquitted of war crimes charges, is ill and living in Bad Wiessee.

Extreme caution in dealing with subject is indicated.
