BUDGET
The Upper House took up the budget for fiscal 1953 yesterday. The revised bill that passed the Lower House on Friday came up for debate in the Upper House Budget Committee. Even before Budget Committee deliberations opened, the Left and Right Socialists began raising objections. At the earlier Steering Committee meeting they criticized the Government's handling of the budget, pointing out that such a drastic revision of the original draft was unprecedented. They asked whether the Government should explain the changes in a new financial policy address. Deputy Prime Minister OGATA , who attended the meeting, dismissed this possibility. "I don't think the amendments have changed the Government fundamental policy," he said, "so the Government has no intention of delivering another financial policy address at a plenary session."
