Dear Mr []

Although I wrote a letter to you yesterday I must write again. The matter is that I have received a letter from my boys. They write that they have been visited by a gentleman of an office engaged in certain activities who told them to give him all their papers in order to give them other papers instead. This means the boys will become what your office wants them to. You understand me, I hope. He added that now everything would depend only upon the flexibility and quickness of your office as they have done what had been required.

This is only to inform you that things seem to be all right and that, probably, there will not be any letter from Mr. MacLeod at all as he has done his job. I hope to be able to give you some more information by the next week as I am expecting a detailed letter from the boys in which they will give the numbers of their papers and all the other details.

I hope there will ~~be~~ not be any difficulties as this most difficult question is being settled. Perhaps, the boys will be asked to leave that country soon: I do not know exactly yet so far I know those people they will, probably, urge and press because they will not want to get into any troubles. Yet this is only my guess and I shall be glad if they will not urge as even now this will take some time from your office and, alas, I know ~~the~~ what red tape is too well (I do not mean you as I know that if this depended upon you you would do this in two days).

Thus now you know and we must wait a little. As this is the only news I am closing and sending my best greetings to you and Mr []

*With kindest regards
Sincerely yours,
N. Poppe*
