9 February 1962

Dr. E. White, DD/I, OSI/LSD, Via Chief IO/5

On 6 February 1962, Dr. Schulz conducted me on a tour of the Institute facilities, files, and library. While looking at the library's medical holdings, I mentioned that I had met you through my work in the medical field with JPRS. I relayed your greetings to him and he was very pleased. In discussing projects the Institute could undertake, I mentioned a possible revision of the blue NIH Soviet Medical Directory. He felt, and, on the basis of my preliminary survey, I agree that he and the other Institute personnel could update, correct, and supplement this directory. He mentioned that you had sent him a copy when it first appeared and suggested writing to you about contacting NIH concerning the possibility and funding of a revised 2nd edition. I told him to mention the new National Medical Library as another possibility. It would be a very valuable contribution and would correct many of the original errors. I feel that it could be done well and inexpensively here in Munich. Dr. Schulz said that he would write to you. He will probably also want to discuss this with you when he visits you next month. Dr. Frederiksen agreed that this would be a worthwhile project and urged him to write. I thought that you should know in advance of his letter how this idea originated.

Question: The matter did not come up, but if Dr. Schulz should ask, where are you now working?

Ed Crowley
