Title of document : DAVILA, Charles A. --

Romanian Envoy Cites Need for Coalition with Russia

Document to be filed in : [redacted]

Cross-reference form to be filed in : [redacted] serial

Excerpt of pertinent information: From DETROIT NEWS, 24 April 1945.

Davila said for quotations: "Premiers Radescu and Sanatescu, whom I happen to know, are two typical Romanian generals to whom the ideals of democracy are foreign as to any two generals in Hitler's Wehrmacht."

"When Iron Guard Romania collapsed, they were accepted as the logical military governors of the country. Both merely waited for the Red Army to withdraw that they might put Romania back on the path of autocratic government. They had to go."

From DETROIT NEWS, 27 April 1945

[Davila explains] "I am convinced that the initial error was, after Antonescu's government was overthrown by King Michael, and Romania came over into the camp of her old allies of 1916, to make generals the heads of governments. Indeed Romania needed a democratic revolution in order to outroot all fascist and reactionary elements. But one could not expect Romanian generals, even pro-Allied ones, to look favorably upon revolutionary measures and not try to delay them."

"Prodigal Romania Returns to her Old Allies" by C. Davila, October, 1944.

"The provisional government will have to quit, of course, after Germany's capitulation. Generals should have no place in a democratic government in Romania, not even at the War Department. Democratic generals may be found in the Western armies; but in Southern, Central and Balkan Europe they have not yet made their appearance."
