Congo: Hammarskjold told a group of Western representatives on 8 April that Kasavubu's recent letter, which suggested a phased entry of a UN police unit into Matadi, was unsatisfactory. He said that Canadian communications personnel, who would be essential to any military movements through the port, would refuse to go back under such an arrangement. However, he stated that the Kasavubu reply did not warrant strong UN action and implied that he hoped to gain further concessions from the Congolese by negotiation.

*The 2,300-man Indian UN contingent destined for Katanga remains on shipboard off Dar es Salaam pending a decision in New York concerning its disposition. A UN plan to airlift the contingent into Katanga is stymied at present by the unavailability of aviation fuel in Dar es Salaam and by the inadequacy of the local runway.
