DAILY BRIEF

*USSR: A test vehicle was launched on the Tyura Tam Missile Test Range yesterday at about 1400 EST and failed in flight a few minutes thereafter. It is not yet known whether the launching involved a test ICBM or a vehicle associated with the Soviet space program. The launching from Tyura Tam and subsequent failure were confirmed [redacted]

A test failure is also indicated [redacted]

[redacted] Yesterday's launching [redacted] activity involving the entire Tyura Tam range complex and Soviet tracking sites, as well as the four Sibir-class missile-range instrumentation ships in the Pacific. These four ships, however, which since mid-January have maintained positions in the Pacific similar to those assumed for the space-related activities in the fall of 1960, did not participate in the last eight hours of the operation yesterday. This would suggest that the vehicle launched may have been a test ICBM intended for impact on the Kamchatka Peninsula, similar to the test ICBM launched successfully to Kamchatka on 13 January. Nevertheless, part of the protracted activity which preceded yesterday's launch indicated space-vehicle preparations, and we still look for a major test in the Soviet space program to be attempted in the near future. [redacted]

Laos: Souvanna Phouma has designated Khamsouk Keola, who is in rebel-held Xieng Khouang, to be "acting premier," according to a Pathet Lao radio announcement of 2 February. Souvanna is alleged to have named two other members of his "government"--Quinim Phol-sena and Tiao Sisoumang--to assist Khamsouk in carrying out the responsibilities of the "lawful government of Laos." The broadcast asserted that Souvanna himself would return to Laos in the "near future" to "resume his administration of domestic affairs."

Communist China's foreign minister told a Peiping rally on 2 February that aid would be given the "lawful Laotian government" of Souvanna Phouma if it were requested. [redacted] (Backup, Page 1)

Chinese UN Representation: [Nationalist China's position in the United Nations is becoming increasingly precarious. Taipei suffered some of its worst setbacks during the first half of the 15th UN General Assembly. Although the assembly in October decided to shelve the question of Chinese UN representation for the duration of the session, it did so by the slimmest margin Taipei has received since 1951. In addition, for the first time Nationalist China will almost certainly lose its seat on the UN Economic and Social Council, although the five permanent members of the Security Council have traditionally been re-elected when their three-year terms expire. Nationalist China may also lose its right to vote unless it makes a payment of more than $1, 000, 000 toward its overdue assessments before the assembly resumes. Although it is difficult to overrule a previous decision of the assembly, all these factors may encourage some of Peiping's supporters to reopen the issue of Chinese UN representation at the General Assembly session scheduled to resume on 7 March.] [redacted]

Gizenga in Stanleyville has answered Nasir's recent message of willingness to furnish supplies if the Sudan's permission for transit rights could be obtained. Gizenga suggested that arms be sent in the guise of "humanitarian assistance." He also reiterated his warning that the situation in the Congo was "more than grave" because of the "imperialists'" efforts to unite the forces of Mobutu, Tshombé, and Kalonji for an attack on the Stanleyville regime. Gizenga stated that without assistance his position would become untenable within two weeks. [redacted]

USSR-Iraq: Several reports indicate that a recent shipment of Soviet arms to Iraq included 12 to 16 crates containing MIG-19 jet fighters. If confirmed, this would be the first delivery of these high-performance aircraft to a nonbloc country. Although the aircraft have not yet been positively identified, [redacted]

[redacted] If such aircraft have been shipped to Iraq, it is likely that a similar shipment has been, or soon will be, made to the UAR. Both countries have been seeking MIG-19s, and Moscow has conducted training courses in the USSR for Iraqi and UAR personnel on this type of aircraft. [redacted] (Backup, Page 6) in nearly three years. Tunisian participation in the meetings, ending the boycott imposed by Bourguiba in 1958, appears to be part of an effort by Tunisia, Iraq, and Jordan to make the league more effective and less of an exclusive instrument of UAR President Nasir's policies. Nasir, however, holds important advantages in any contest for influence in the league. His more strident anti-Western propaganda has greater popular appeal in the other Arab states, while the league's secretariat is located in Cairo, subject to all the direct and indirect influences the UAR leader can bring to bear. Most other Arab leaders will almost certainly feel compelled to echo Nasir's strong propaganda attacks on Western policies, especially concerning Algeria, Congo, and Israel, regardless of their differences with Nasir and their real attitudes on these questions. Ethiopia: The political situation in Ethiopia appears to be deteriorating further as Emperor Haile Selassie continues to delay naming a new government. The Emperor, preoccupied with security matters in the seven weeks following the abortive coup, has concerned himself more with pressing charges against those who participated in or sympathized with the revolt than in reconstructing the government or in attempting to alleviate the conditions which caused the uprising. The American ambassador believes new disorders could break out in Addis Ababa if the military tribunal, which is reported ready to begin proceedings against the popular rebel leader Menghistu Neway, imposes the death sentence. [REDACTED] (Backup, Page 8)

[REDACTED] Bolivia: President Paz Estenssoro believes that acceptance of Soviet bloc economic aid will not endanger the US grant-aid program which makes up a substantial part of Bolivia's domestic budget, according to American Ambassador Strom. Strom states that although Paz is aware the bloc]

~~SECRET~~Situation in Laos

Arrangements for the designation of an acting premier under Souvanna Phouma were presumably made during the course of a recent visit to Phnom Penh by Phoumi Vongvichit, an influential Pathet Lao leader. [Conflicting versions] be-[] between the Pathet Lao leader and Souvanna have been received, [] Souvanna agreed to return shortly to rebel-held territory in Laos. His return would considerably buttress claims by Communist countries that they are supporting the legal government of Laos, as well as improve this "government's" competitive position for equal status with the Boun Oum government in any negotiations which might take place on the Laotian crisis.

Meanwhile, the arrival of Khamsouk and Sisoumang in Xieng Khouang will give greater substance to the hitherto rather shadowy "lawful government of Laos," for which Quinim had been the sole spokesman. Khamsouk, the new "acting premier," had been minister of health in the Souvanna government, and was identified with Quinim's left-wing faction in the cabinet. He is 52 years old and is a locally trained doctor, the equivalent of a medical technician. In early December, Khamsouk fled to Rangoon at the same time Souvanna took refuge in Phnom Penh. He and his party returned to Xieng Khouang by way of Kunming and Hanoi. Sisoumang was a secretary of state in the Souvanna cabinet and was also identified with the Quinim faction. Sisoumang is a nephew of Souvanna and a son of the elder brother of the late King Sisavang Vong. He fought against the Viet Minh in their 1953-54 invasions of Laos and was captured by the Pathet Lao in 1954, remaining with them until the unification agreements of November 1957. Quinim will serve in the Xieng Khouang "government" as minister of defense, foreign affairs, and finance; and Sisoumang as minister of social affairs, economy and interior.

Without encouraging any Laotian appeal for Chinese "volunteers," Communist China's Foreign Minister Chen Yi nevertheless has implied that the Chinese are prepared to step up the scale of bloc assistance to pro-Communist forces in Laos. Souvanna, so far as is known, has never formally asked for Chinese aid. The ex-premier has expressed his interest in "friendly relations" with the Chinese and was planning a trip to Communist China before he fled to Cambodia. [redacted]

The two Soviet AN-12s which arrived in Peiping on 1 February left for the USSR as scheduled on 2 February. They are presumably en route to their home base in the Moscow area, from which they departed on 24 January. Airlift operations into Laos continue to be scheduled. [redacted]

Chinese UN Representation: Taipei's UN
Position Precarious

[While a majority of UN members have supported the moratorium on Chinese UN representation since 1951, it has been evident since 1955 that Taipei would not be able to muster the necessary two-thirds majority vote to sustain its position if its right to the China seat were formally questioned on a substantive vote. The 15th UN General Assembly on 8 October "decided not to consider" the question, but only 42 members supported the resolution, while 34 opposed it and 22 members--mostly African--abstained. Following the balloting, various African delegates made statements indicating that the abstentions were grudgingly given and would not be repeated in the future. Many supporters of the moratorium agreed that it could not be upheld at any future session. One of these, the government of Pakistan, has recently asked the US Embassy in Karachi whether the United States would be prepared in the future to have its allies "follow their own conscience" on the question or whether it considers support of the moratorium a test of friendship with the United States.]

[Nationalist China, considerably in arrears in paying its assessed dues, would find it difficult to get the assembly to grant an exception which would enable it to retain its vote at the resumed 15th session. The UN Charter does provide that the General Assembly may permit a defaulting member to vote if failure to pay is due to "conditions beyond the control of the member."]

[Nationalist China faces another critical vote when the World Health Organization convenes in New Delhi on 7 February. If Peiping's supporters--encouraged by Taipei's precarious UN position--succeed in unseating Taipei, this will be the first time Communist China has been formally admitted to an international organization affiliated with the United Nations.]

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

~~TOP SECRET~~Situation in the Congo

Neutralization of rival Congolese factions may prove impossible in view of the current reduction in UN troop strength and the opposition which could be expected from each major Congolese faction. The Leopoldville government would refuse to disarm its troops until all other Congolese forces had been neutralized. The Gizenga regime in Stanleyville would not abandon its military efforts unless assured of political dominance.

President Tshombé of Katanga, who has concluded a military accord with Albert Kalonji of the South Kasai mining state, is likely to prove at least as recalcitrant as Kasavubu and Gizenga. Katanga appears about to tap new sources of military equipment; reportedly nine Fouga Magister jet aircraft have been purchased from France and South Africa has agreed in principle to supply fighter aircraft.

some seven tons of military supplies would be sent to Katanga by special aircraft on 30 January, but that a shortage of money prevented the purchase of submachine guns in Belgium.

Katanga is beginning offensive action against the Baluba tribesmen, who with Gizenga's military support have set up an autonomous regime around Manono in northern Katanga. Tshombé, in reply to UN protests against an aerial bombing of Manono on 30 January which endangered Nigerian troops, has warned of further land and air attacks.

on 1 February Katangan armed forces began moving northward along the rail line toward the UN military base at Kamina.

[The Katanga government claims to have information that Moroccans at a Baluba center in central Katanga have been instructing the rebels in the use of small arms and 81 millimeter mortars. The Moroccans reportedly plan to leave large stocks of these weapons for the rebels when they leave the Congo.]

gold. He asked that a plane be sent to Stanleyville to collect gold ore. This request suggests that Gizenga has been able to resume some production at the Kilomoto mines in Orientale, which in past years produced ore worth several million dollars annually. Production at these sites was interrupted last summer when the European staff left. Gizenga may also hope that the UAR and the bloc will make greater efforts to supply military assistance if offered payment in gold. [redacted]

~~SECRET~~ [REDACTED]Soviet Arms Deliveries to Iraq

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Moscow had agreed to supply to Iraq 16 MIG-19s and three Antonov transports. These aircraft were scheduled to be provided under the Soviet-Iraqi arms agreement negotiated earlier in 1960. At least seven shiploads of materiel have been delivered under this agreement since November.

[REDACTED] Cairo asked the USSR to provide MIG-19s in mid-1958, but Moscow apparently did not agree to do so until early 1960. [In mid-1960, the UAR sent a group of pilots to the Soviet Union for training in these aircraft.] UAR officials claimed on several occasions in past months that they were going to receive MIG-19s.

[REDACTED] [The Soviet Union reportedly has also agreed to supply MIG-19s to Djakarta under a major arms agreement negotiated with Indonesia early this year.] [REDACTED]

~~SECRET~~ [REDACTED]

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~The Arab League

The Arab League was founded in 1945 to promote unity among its member states, but it has made little progress toward achieving this goal. Its founders--foremost of whom was the late Iraqi Prime Minister Nuri Said--professed a desire to work toward the sacrifice of sovereignty and special interest in order to attain such unity. The original members were Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Jordan, and Yemen, along with Egypt and Syria, which in 1958 formed the United Arab Republic. Entry into the league by Libya (1953), the Sudan (1956), and Tunisia and Morocco (1958) brought the total membership to its present ten. Algeria, whose rebel government has a representative attending the current meeting, is not a member. In the 16 years of the league's existence, relatively minor advances in cultural and economic cooperation have been made, but political differences remain as pronounced as ever.

The league attempts to set forth a coordinated Arab viewpoint on various issues and maintains information offices outside the Arab world for this purpose. This kind of display of unity is negated, however, by the almost constant propaganda contest among Arab leaders for position as the leading champion of Arab causes. At various times, for example, Cairo, Amman, and Baghdad have accused each other of promoting a policy of softness toward Israel or of lukewarmness toward the Algerian rebels.

In recent years, Nasir's strong advocacy of his type of Arab nationalism and neutralism, which offends pro-Western Arab governments and many ambitious Arab leaders, has been the most constant irritant in inter-Arab relations. Jordan's King Husayn and Iraqi Prime Minister Qasim--well aware of Nasir's past sponsorship of attempts to overthrow their respective regimes--oppose Nasir's continued dominance of the League, but neither commands great trust or respect from other members. In such an atmosphere, the league is unlikely to increase its meager contributions to Arab unity, and efforts to form a bloc to undermine Nasir's influence in the organization will probably grow only gradually.

~~SECRET~~Situation in Ethiopia Deteriorating

Haile Selassie's legal adviser had urged that trials of those suspected of disloyalty be conducted "in an open and dignified manner." This the Emperor has refused.

[redacted] secret trials of civilians accused of criticizing the regime or of expressing sympathy for the aims of the rebels have been under way for over a week, with sentences of up to eight years pronounced.

The Emperor has failed to reassert his strong personal leadership and the American ambassador has characterized the political situation in Ethiopia as a "state of aimless drift." Dissident elements are circulating antiregime rumors and distributing leaflets in the capital asking for support of the rebel cause. This activity, together with the widespread concern over the fate of General Menghistu, the former Imperial Body Guard commandant, has increased public support for the objectives espoused by leaders of the abortive coup.

Western officials in Addis Ababa, aware that a continuation of the present trend could lead to further disorders, have apparently been unable to persuade the Emperor that prompt political and economic reforms are necessary to quell the discontent.

[redacted]

[redacted] Addis Ababa had "the stink of Baghdad"--an allusion to the situation there preceding the revolution which overthrew the Iraqi royalty.

The British Embassy, anticipating no constructive action by the Emperor, is formulating an emergency evacuation plan.

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~Bolivian President Plans to Accept Both US and Soviet Bloc Aid

[President Paz has indicated to American Ambassador Strom that he is making plans to utilize both US and Soviet bloc aid. The United States has contributed grant aid in recent years to enable the Bolivian Government to balance its domestic budget. In a conversation with Ambassador Strom on 30 January, Paz conveyed the impression that he considers American grant aid, contributed in recent years to balance Bolivia's domestic budget, a part of ordinary revenues on which his administration can count.]

[The USSR, which has offered a credit of $150,000,000, wants its aid to go to projects entirely separate from those where US aid is involved, according to an earlier statement by Paz. Paz has also said that he was considering "reserving" for the USSR the opportunity to provide equipment for hydroelectric generating plants for the nationalized Bolivian Mining Corporation because he assumed that such plants would not be included in aid to the mines from the United States, Germany, and the Inter-American Development Bank. If this assumption was incorrect, Paz said, Soviet aid could be reserved exclusively for the national petroleum company.]

[The Bolivian Government signed a cultural agreement with Czechoslovakia on 23 January providing for relations between scientific institutions, universities, and cultural and sports organizations. The signing took place during the six-day visit of Deputy Foreign Minister Hajek, who had been invited by President Paz. Ambassador Strom notes that the pact is Bolivia's first cultural agreement with the bloc and that it provides opportunity for political penetration.]

~~TOP SECRET~~ [REDACTED]Venezuelan Government Concerned With Rightist Plotting

Venezuelan military dissidents in exile are apparently plotting another attempt against the Venezuelan Government. Their plans might include an attempt on the life of President Betancourt, who was seriously injured last June by an assassination effort backed by Dominican dictator Trujillo. Venezuela claimed to have evidence of Trujillo's continuing involvement with the plotters and presented charges against the Dominican Republic before the Organization of American States in November. Trujillo was recently reported "impatient and upset" at the delay or miscarriage of a new plan to assassinate Betancourt.

The Dominican Republic also backed the abortive Venezuelan military uprising of 20-21 April 1960, which was led by exiles who crossed the border from Colombia. [REDACTED] the Colombian Government has been asked to cooperate in the surveillance of Venezuelan exiles reported to be in the border area.

During two extended periods in late 1960 Betancourt faced widespread violence by strong pro-Castro elements which posed a serious threat to the stability of his moderate-leftist regime. On those occasions, and during the April coup attempt, the majority of the armed forces demonstrated loyalty to the government by taking prompt measures to suppress the unrest. There is no evidence of serious disaffection among the top levels of the officer corps.

Another coup attempt is likely to aggravate the serious economic problems confronting Betancourt which both rightist and leftist opposition elements can be expected to exploit.
