I. THE COMMUNIST BLOC

II. ASIA-AFRICA

Indonesia: President Sukarno has appointed a high proportion of leftists, including the Communist party chairman, to executive bodies in the National Front, which Sukarno heads and which he probably intends to develop as Indonesia's single political party. The army's representation is fairly submerged in the Front hierarchy. Sukarno appears to have shelved temporarily his efforts to include Communists in the cabinet; instead, he is promoting them in other government organizations in the hope of gradually working them into the direct line of government, despite army objections. (Page 1)

*Congo: An anti-Mobutu mutiny near Leopoldville apparently has been at least temporarily suppressed. Enlisted personnel in a camp south of the city reportedly were partly mollified after conversations with Mobutu, Kasavubu, and other high officials. However, the basic cause of unrest—a dispute over pay—remains and could lead to further outbreaks. The unreliability of Mobutu's troops in the Leopoldville area will place further strain on the limited military capability of his forces, some of the best of whom have been airlifted to Equateur Province to meet a reported invasion by Gizenga troops.

The Mobutu-Kasavubu government is continuing its efforts to obtain aid abroad. Foreign Minister Bomboko, during a recent trip to Europe, requested military and financial aid.
[from both Belgium and France to counteract the trend toward Lumumba]

In Katanga Province, Tshombe's forces have engaged in limited aerial harassment of the invading Gizenga troops [but have not moved into the "neutral zone" now occupied by the UN and by Gizenga troops.] Some clashes between the UN and the invaders have been reported.

In an 11 January cable to the UN Security Council, Victor Lundula, Gizenga's army chief, charged that Belgium is continuing to permit Mobutu's troops to move into Orientale and Kivu provinces through Ruanda-Urundi. Lundula threatened to invade Ruanda-Urundi unless this assistance is stopped.

Laos: [The Kong Le - Pathet Lao forces are beginning to exert pressure against the government's build-up area some 40 miles south of Xieng Khouang town in what may be an attempt to break up General Phoumi's planned offensive to recapture the Plaine des Jarres. An advance government command post in this area reportedly has withdrawn southward following an artillery-supported enemy attack. Meanwhile, the government is strengthening Luang Prabang's defenses on the basis of new reports of a threatened Pathet Lao attack from the north.]

Airlift operations into Laos by bloc transports continued through 13 January. Five Soviet LI-2 (C-47 type) transports have been scheduled for Peiping from Irkutsk. They are probably destined for use in the Laos airlift.

III. THE WEST

Haiti: President Duvalier's roughshod methods against the opposition and the Roman Catholic Church in Haiti appear to be increasing the numbers and effectiveness of those opposed to him. The immediate issue--student resistance to government efforts to convert the school system into a political instrument—is now being exploited by factions of the underground opposition, including a group believed to be linked to Haiti's small Communist movement. The expulsion of the two top members of the church hierarchy and a number of priests for alleged support of the student "agitators" weakens the anti-Communist position. Barring the always possible eruption of mass rioting, however, the regime will probably weather the current crisis, since it still seems to have the support of the army. (Page 4)

*USSR: *(At 2019 EST on 13 January 1961 an ICBM test vehicle was launched on the Tyura Tam Missile Test Range, flight to the usual impact area on Kamchatka. The last such test was on 6 June 1960. The SIBIR-class instrumentation ships which are in the mid-Pacific were not involved in this operation. These ships, which have been involved in previous extended range missile firings and in some attempted space ventures, apparently have not yet reached their intended stations.)

14 Jan 61 DAILY BRIEF
Sukarno Appoints High Proportion of Leftists to National Front Executive Bodies

President Sukarno has appointed a high proportion of leftists, including Communist party chairman Aidit, to executive bodies in his new National Front. Contrary to Indonesian Army expectations, army leaders hold no special position in the Front hierarchy. Approximately 32 percent of the 70 members of the Front's central board are members of the Indonesian Communist party or appear susceptible to Communist direction; approximately 20 percent are army oriented. Aidit and Army Chief of Staff General Nasution are two of seven equally ranking vice chairmen; the remaining five are likely to look primarily to Sukarno for guidance. The secretary general of the organization, Sudibjo, is a weak personality who in the past has appeared to be a Communist dupe.

The National Front is intended to function through a multilevel structure ranging from the executive board in Jakarta to village organizations throughout the nation. Its purpose is twofold: to strengthen national unity and to provide mass support for the government, thereby making "guided democracy" work. According to Sukarno's plan, all political parties and functional groups will work through the Front—submerging their identities and interests to do so.

Only the superstructure of the organization has yet been appointed; other levels, however, are likely to reflect the composition of the executive and central boards. Once the organization is activated, it is likely to provide a formidable and protected vehicle for use by the Communists.

Sukarno appears to have bowed temporarily to army opposition and abandoned his efforts to include Communists in the cabinet. Instead, he is promoting them in other government organizations in the apparent hope of gradually working them into the direct line of government despite army objections.
Situation in Laos

Kong Le - Pathet Lao forces are beginning to exert pressure against the government's build-up area some 40 miles south of Xieng Khouang town, in what may be an attempt to disrupt General Phoumi's planned offensive against the Plaine des jarres. According to one report, the government command post at Ban Ta Viang has been abandoned following an artillery-supported enemy attack. Aerial reconnaissance over Ban Ta Viang on 12 January tended to confirm reports of enemy artillery fire. Phoumi will not be able to retake the Plaine des Jarres, the high morale of Kong Le's troops, the terrain advantages for the defense force, and the large number of arms retreating government forces abandoned on the Plaine des Jarres."

The government commander at Luang Prabang plans to reinforce the garrison there following receipt of new reports that the Pathet Lao will soon attempt to capture the royal capital. Although a full-scale attack on Luang Prabang is probably not as imminent as these reports suggest, there continue to be indications of a Pathet Lao build-up for an attack. A Soviet IL-14 is reported to have airdropped supplies at Nam Bac, a post about 55 miles northeast of Luang Prabang which the Pathet Lao recently captured. An enemy force with artillery is reported to be north of Muong Sai, due west of Nam Bac, prepared to attack this recently reinforced government post when food supplies become available."

Airlift operations into Laos by bloc transports continued through 13 January. Five Soviet LI-2 (C-47 type) transports have been scheduled for Peiping from Irkutsk, probably for use in the Laos airlift. They may replace some of the IL-14s which have been flying almost continuously since 3 December.

Kong Le, in an interview with a French journalist on 13 January, expressed confidence that he would defeat Phoumi's forces. While denying that Chinese Communist or North Vietnamese forces were fighting at his side, Kong Le admitted that "some" North Vietnamese technicians were attached to his paratroopers. (TIAL)
Haiti Facing New Political Crisis

President Francois Duvalier's roughshod methods against the opposition and the Roman Catholic Church in Haiti appear to be increasing the number and effectiveness of those actively opposed to him. The immediate issue--student resistance to the government's efforts to convert the school system into a political instrument of the regime--is being exploited by factions of the underground opposition, apparently including a group linked to Haiti's small Communist movement.

A rash of opposition mimeographed bulletins that appeared on the streets of the capital on 12 January included strike calls for both high school and university students. The bulletins have a high political content and student grievances are secondary, suggesting that more experienced oppositionists than the students are directing the moves. One leaflet, issued by a group calling itself the Popular Party for National Liberation, calls for the formation of a popular front to oust Duvalier. The only previous public act by this group was last May Day when it issued a Communist-line tract.

Noise bombs were exploded in two schools on 11 January, and attendance at the secondary and elementary schools of the capital, recently reopened after a six-week "vacation period," is reported to have declined. The university, closed by the regime last November, is scheduled to reopen on 16 January, but the majority of the students are expected to respect the strike call.

The position of the Roman Catholic Church, which is not strong in Haiti, has been further weakened by Duvalier's summary expulsion of the archbishop last November and of his successor and a number of other priests this week. They were charged with supporting the student "agitators." The Vatican's 12 January excommunication of all officials responsible for the expulsions will probably lead to further efforts by the President.
to "Haitianize" the church, which has long been under attack for the fact that most priests in Haiti have been foreigners, mainly French.

Barring the always possible eruption of mass violence in Port-au-Prince, the regime will probably survive the current crisis. The Haitian Army, the key to the political situation, still appears to be supporting the President.
