Dear Wally:

Thank you for your interesting and amusing and very encouraging letter.

I have seen something of Hollywood because at various times I have represented some of these companies, and what you say is the best appreciation of the place that I have down.

I have been working directly with your committee and want to continue to do so. There is a lot to be done and I am glad you are coming back healthy in mind and in spirit.

Sincerely,

Dear Colonel

One of the purposes of this assignment has been accomplished so magnificently that I am more endeared to you than I can very well say without becoming maudlin: I'm actively enjoying life again, as I have not done (honestly) since 1937. I feel swell, and the vital juices are flowing and I have been having a glorious time--and I am now hankering to get back there to my real work again. By the time I accomplish the other purpose of the trip--the completion of the work Mr Morgenthau wants done--I'll be wild to get home again. Then all three of us will be happy, I hope.

As for the work, it now appears that I shall be here another three or four weeks. Then I'll be starting back via Washington. I'll check with the Treasury Department, of course, before actually starting, and with you and Bob. But I hope to God I can start back then, for while it's been unbelievably swell to be here, I miss Mary like crazy (as us Hollywood people say) and I'm beginning to miss our own proper work too.

Mary was here two weeks, and they were the happiest we've had together since 1937, by sober calculation--as sober as we could be when we were so happy, anyway. I don't know what has been the matter with me, and neither does the doctor. Maybe it was just reaction from those bitter years of strain in Berlin. But we're both incredibly all right now, and you will just have to guess (because neither one of us can figure out any way to tell you) how much that means to us.

Two weeks here meant that Mary was three weeks away from the boys, and that was all she felt comfortable about leaving them, so she had planned to start back at about that time in any event. Then her father died, so she hastened her departure by one day in order to be at the funeral. His death was not as tragic as it might have been, especially in a world at war. He was an old man, had had a very happy, full and useful life and died so suddenly that he couldn't possibly have felt any pain for more than a bare instant, if at all. But naturally Mary was upset-- and of course the funeral and the unhappy business of settling his affairs--took something out of her.

While she was here, though, it was like a three-ring circus. The first day she was here, I produced Walter Pidgeon at a cocktail party. The second day I produced Melvyn Douglas at another party and we had dinner with the Disneys at the Beachcomber's, an artificially tropical joint where artificial rain drums furiously on a (doubtless also artificial) tin roof and the place is so dark that you can't see who else is there or with whom, which of course is why it is kept so dark. The third day we had dinner with Errol Flynn and his Man Friday at Flynn's house--or rather, at Bruce Cabot's house, where we're to stay until he gets it by Danita got their real gobots arrived today, I mean just all this time about what happened that evening. That's the first information.

It didn't surprise me. I haven't been around town that much.

Then, in rapid succession, I received a call from Ray and Norma Shearer doing a ~~short~~ ~~short~~ ~~short~~ ~~short~~ ~~short~~ ~~short~~ ~~short~~ ~~short~~ small MGM studios for "The Bachelor Party"; a party at the house of Melba Viertel, a call of Leatrice, whom we met this summer; Manna, the Max Reinhardt, the Peter Lorre, the ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ and assorted other celebrities; a ~~lady~~ ~~lady~~ ~~lady~~ ~~lady~~ ~~lady~~ ~~lady~~ ~~lady~~ the Methodist Bishop of the Calvary Area and his wife, who are old friends of ours; a waitress at the ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ ~~old~~ a custard pie in her own face; and a woman screaming at 5:30 o'clock in the morning in the corridor outside our room that she was being attacked. What more could mortal man ~~want~~ ~~want~~ ~~want~~ ~~want~~ ~~want~~ ~~want~~ ~~want~~

Actually, the waitress spilled the pie off a tray she was carrying aloft, and the woman who screamed she was being attacked seemed more angry than frightened (maybe it wasn't a very good attack), but why spoil a story?

This is a funny place in entirely unexpected ways. Never before in my life have I been in a city where there are so few pretty girls, so many middle-aged women in pants, so many really decrepit old people, so many publicly ill-played cards that have stopped, so many cat and dog hospitals and so many billboards advertising out-rate funerals for men and horses alike.

An astonishing proportion of even the youngish and infirm aged women are gaunt and strained and haggard, and the old women are so thickly daubed with paint it is really revolting.
"It's like the second act of one of those plays like 'Allward Bound,'" Ernst Lubitsch said one ~~night~~ night when I spoke to him about all the old people. "These people have all died but they haven't found out about it yet."

Everything is 18 miles from everything else, with the result that you go bankrupt accepting the kind invitations of people who (naturally) don't provide you with transportation as well as food and drink and good company, so that you spend two to four times as much getting to and from a dinner out than it would cost you to buy your own dinner.

But don't think I'm complaining, because I'm not. On the contrary. See paragraphs 1 and 3, above. Besides, the kids on Bataan aren't exactly getting rich, either.

And people here are really extremely kind--and altogether much nicer than they realize themselves and than the rest of the country has any idea. I sent a formal report on some of the aspects of the situation here which would seem to be relevant to our official plans; I hope you saw it, because some of the points are fairly interesting and--to me, at least--novel and surprising.

For the rest, Hollywood is at least as intelligent, as cultivated, as well-informed, as enlightened socially (in the larger sense of the word "social") and as patriotic as any ~~large~~ ~~large~~ community I know anything about--and it also has an acute inferiority complex and a bad tendency to panic.

Somebody has done the whole industry a great disservice by spreading the "Pants-Presser Legend" about Hollywood: that the community's morals are unspeakable, its intelligence hardly ~~worth~~ ~~worth~~ worth mentioning and its patriotism dubious, to put

It mildly. People out here say that's sharper than a ten-cent foundation in fact is the fact out says, but that "never is less excuse for them now. Even so, though, most people I have met and talked to out here still have an unfavorable attitude towards the industry which I certainly can't find anywhere. There's adequate justification for--and some people tell me that the "Pants-Presser legend" has been deliberately spread around this country by the producers themselves in the belief that that was the sort of thing the public liked to hear about the picture business; it is, in, ~~so~~, somebody's idea of shade.

that is startling

Hollywood has an awe for Government and for anyone who has been successful on Broadway or who has published a best-seller. ~~that is startling~~ The awe for people who have been successful in the arts is a reflection of the fact that complex people have here about the artistic and intellectual qualities of the pictures they make--which, actually, are on the whole much superior to those of Broadway. The awe for people in the Government is a reflection of various factors in the situation here: First, a certain number of Jews here have the feeling that anti-Semitism is a very ugly business. In America already, at least ~~now~~, potentially, anti-Semitism might become much, much worse; therefore, they argue, the threat of a Senate investigation is a dangerous one, because it may be inspired at least partly by anti-Semitism. I am not stir it up still more. Also, some of them feel that America is their last haven and that if things go wrong here there is utterly no hope for them anywhere in the world and that it is therefore imperative to heed every wish of the Government. It is the last country of refuge. Also, some of the Jews here (in fact, I suppose most of them) are acutely patriotic and want to practice every whim of their government in times like these.

Another reason for the industry's awe of Government is that financially the industry is in some respects rather like an inverted pyramid standing on its apex. Pictures must earn tremendous profits, in relation to the capital investment in the production of them, because they must support and make profitable, not only the studios here, but also theaters all over the country. Thus anything which threatens earnings--like the danger of prohibitive taxation--is liable to panic some people here.

Some, of course, of the constant talk you hear here running down the picture business, is due to other causes. For one thing, most of the talk comes from writers, ~~here~~, and a lot of them are afflicted with two difficulties: They have to work under the direct, detailed supervision and orders of men whose whole interest is profits (as in any other business), and this gall, them. In the newspaper business, a first-class correspondent for a good paper never is told what to write or how to write it, directly or indirectly. He writes as he thinks the facts require, and if the publisher doesn't like it, the correspondent gets fired. But even in the worst papers, there is no direct, constant, detailed supervision or orders of how to write each story. Here, though, a writer is told what his plot is to be, what his characters are to be, and everything else, and he may have his story hacked to pieces a dozen times by somebody who knows nothing whatever about good writing but has ideas about box office appeal. This causes a lot of discontent and grumbling among the writers. The second great difficulty of a lot of writers out here is that they are so overcome by the chances to make really big money that they are unhappy with themselves. They think they should be writing more honest stuff for less money, but they can't quite bring themselves to do so as long as they can make such enormous amounts writing.

what they consider to be the particular strengths of our side as well as anything about their activities. That's all I want.

In spite of these things, though, I'll repeat the same words than its reputation that the Americans and British have a much better--more honest, more intelligent, deeper, more patriotic and better informed--than the Russians. I do this (with apologies to Pavlof's Normans or Frenchmen), I do this (with apologies to not only the French but also the Americans) that there's no comparison.

This is just a reminder, really, that if you get a letter in a bathroom or a bar, please don't use a pen and nibble it down energy answering it--although of course it's fine to do so that you'd received it. I'll write you again in a week or two.
All the best. And many, many thanks from me.

Dear Ferdie:

I am writing to confirm an understanding Paul and I reached today concerning which he is also writing you, regarding my further activities here:

Subject to the Secretary's approval, I shall go on with the writing of the four further "scripts" I understand he said he would like to have done to serve in the making of pictures as later determined. This will probably take approximately one month.

Since my services involve no extra expense for which appropriations would be required, I shall go ahead with the four further stories even if it should not be apparent, before I finish them, that funds will be available for carrying the stories into any further stage of production.

When the stories have been put into the form of the "scripts" I am writing and when they have been "illustrated" in the manner with which you are familiar from what you have seen of the story about the little boy, my services will no longer be required here at the studios. If funds are available for "illustrating" the "scripts," I shall stay until that stage of production is finished. If no funds are available even for "illustration," I'll be free as soon as the scripts are finished.

In either event, I'll communicate with you, as well as Col Donovan and Bob Sherwood, before making any definite plans for returning East.

Yours,

Wallace R. Deuel.

Dear Walter:

I have asked Wallace F. Doucet, who will present this letter to you, to do some work for me which necessitates his having access to certain of my correspondence and other papers both personal and official which you may have there in the office, the nature of which he will explain to you.

Will you please make all this material available to Wallie?

I would like to advise you that I have tried to get the best information from the medical people here. I have been in the dental field for over 20 years.
I do not know exactly what caused the tooth to become loose. It may have been a fall or it may have been a trauma.

In my opinion, the tooth is not loose in the jaw itself. It is loose because of kind of instability. It is not a bone problem.
It is not a tooth problem.

There is no way that I can send within the next few days, but I will try to get a treatment plan for you.

If I should go ahead and do the treatment for any other reason, I would have to have to pull all the remaining teeth in the mouth. To do the extraction, I would have to extract all the teeth, because of course the condition of the teeth is such that they cannot be pulled at a time, and would involve a long period of time (to 1960), one full year -- a year and a half, or more. I do not have nor could you afford, either.

I recently, I have had a lot of trouble with my teeth, not only out of normal, between, or after, but also I have found something peculiarly frightening, and that is that some of my teeth, I'd rather tell you, the so-called teeth that are supposed to be any risk of sounding strange, are.

The local office has been in contact with the State Office and is so in communication with them that it is not necessary to make any changes in the present system. It would however be better if we make one or another new adjustment. The following suggestion would simplify matters if no action is taken and the question be made clearer to the State Office. Please let me know what you think of this.

THE LOGIC OF THE STATE

My present assignment is a continual one, and I do not apt to remain so for some time to come -- at least temporarily. It would be impossible to drop it temporarily and resume it. I dropped it permanently, most of the time and energy of my life, and thus far would be wasted, because no only else could read your notes material I have in written form, to any notice. If the information is boarded in my head.

Moreover, I still haven't finished treatments I am having for a kick-back, which has occurred since my return to this country, "an oriental fever I acquired several years ago. These treatments necessitate my being within reach of New York City for the next several months.

and send S.A. [unclear]

... I am in a position to take care of my family and my assignment right now. I have no desire to leave it now or for a period of time. I am not interested in any project. If and when I do leave, I would like to have a chance to get into the field again if possible.

I will be away from about 10 days, probably more, when I was away, until I can find a suitable substitute.

You will remember that I am married with Mr. Morgenthaler and my son. I am not able to earn more than $6,000 every year and we have a house to pay for and two boys and myself. I think to yourself, "What the hell?" It's not all right so far, but these are by far the necessities. That's all,

and send S.A. [unclear]

Field assignments with more than government expenses are not to cover. (I lost about $100.) That Hollywood assignment, if you ask me, is it right or well worth it now, but I left one of my sons at home. Being away I'd be unable to earn that extra money. My wife and I need bring in -- to keep my two families going. I know that it's a lot less as I used to see. In a fact, I almost think that I am better off than ever before. And I know I am. Compared to others, I am better off than most of the people in the world that I know. So I am very humbled and how unmeric. But I think I must let you go on.

In the event I should be able to go to the field, I hope to have an X-2 or S-1 assignment. I wouldn't have the heart to say no to the courage -- to tell Fred Decker and John Whitaker to go on with any part of MO.

As I understand it, your wishes regarding my present assignment are the same as those of my own which I have outlined above. That is, that I carry out the assignment in as front install as may be possible and that I not be diverted from it to other work, no matter how much more exciting the other work may be, until this may be done without jeopardizing my present job.

Unless and until I hear otherwise from you, I shall continue to act in accordance with this statement of the case, and decline to take on any new work which would interfere with the carrying out of my present assignment.

Sorry to throw so much paper at you. Hope to see you before too long -- without scarlet fever.

All the best.

Yours,

Dear Colonel:

I got laid low by some kind of a cold and/or gripe bug upon my return from Washington and have been out of action ever since, so I may not be coming down quite as soon next time as I had planned. I am all right again, but I need to catch up with some work at this end before I come back to acquire some more there.

Hugh Mackintosh of the British Overseas Press Services called me up when I was in Washington last week, said that he would like very much to be in touch with you, and asked me if I would see how you felt about it. I did not want to bother you about the matter, but I had the distinct impression that you felt your relationships with the British were already adequately taken care of by connections with British agencies other than that which Hugh represents. I haven't seen Hugh yet, but expect to do so within the next few days. Unless I hear otherwise from you in the meantime, I'll say something of this sort to him.

Sorry I saw so little of you all last week. Hope for better luck next time.

All the best.

Yours,

Wallace Beale

TO: Mr. Mowinkel
 FROM: John L. Calvocoressi SUBJECT: De Sales and Haas.

DATE: 40 November 1944

1. Richard de Rousay de Sales volunteered for service with the Free French, was honorably discharged, returned to the United States and joined the OWI. From then he came to us and gave every indication of being one of our most valuable men. During his training period he became naturalized and was given reason to believe that he would be commissioned in the American army. Such commission was not granted on account of alleged physical disqualifications. This was a great disappointment to De Sales who, however, consented to be re-commissioned as a Lieutenant (despite his age) in the French army. This has been done, and he has been assigned to duty with us. He is presently at the Port of Embarkation, destined for London.

2. Pierre Haas is likewise one of our most promising men and he too was refused a commission which he had been led to expect on similar grounds. In this case, it was even impossible to obtain his re-integration in the French army. Mr. Haas, consistent with his understanding with SO, accordingly could not accept service with our branch. It is our understanding, however, that he has been taken on by SI and will be used in the Iberian Peninsula.

Dear Ned:

Thank you very much for your letter dated October 30th, 1943, asking for further information concerning Richard de Roussey de Sales and Pierre Haas.

I am forwarding to you herewith the information that you have requested.

Some time ago you called me on the telephone and asked me for information about a man I had recommended some time ago, by the name of Bloom, who is familiar with the Portuguese language. He resides at Wallingford, Connecticut. Since your telephone call I have again checked on this man, and I believe him to be thoroughly reliable in every way. He has been a pilot in the Air Service at the present time.

Hoping to see you again in the near future, I am,

Sincerely yours,

 " Claude 7 - 2448 (business)

Born and educated in France - born August 29, 1900 - educated at the Faculty of Paris (Bachelier ès-sciences). Has resided in this country since 1934; has applied for first papers in 1937, for second papers on June 9, 1941. Final citizenship were granted January 4, 1942. (Certificate #15324, N.Y. District Court).

During the last war, enlisted in 1939. After a few months, was sent to an Officers' Training Camp, where he was taken sick, and finally was discharged.

Was in France, on vacation, at the start of this war. Was called to the colors immediately, and sent as Secretary of Headquarters to the service of General Direction of Artillery where, for a few months, most of his time was occupied in coding and decoding messages. In January 4, 1940, through a decision of the General Commander in Chief of the French Army, was appointed Interpreter in liaison with the British Army. Came back to this country immediately after that, due to the decision of the Ministry of War (Decision #4707 1/EMA), which curtailed the situation of all men on Second Reserve who were residing in foreign countries before the war started, and obliged them to go back to their homes. From then on, up to the Armistice, was connected in this country with the French Intelligence Service (Sûre Sûrse).

Civilian activities were mostly in the wine business. Was Managing Director of G. H. Mumm Société Fânciale de Champagne for a period of seven years. Came to this country in 1934, having severed his relations with G. H. Mumm, and was then connected with an importing firm by the name of Tillier-Thompson. In 1936, became representative for North America of Chas. Heidsieck Champagne, a position he still holds. Since the Armistice, unable to import any goods from France, started making some domestic wines under the name of Chauvenet. These wines are distributed by McKesson & Robbins, Inc. Is also a director of Jean Falou, Inc.

Up to 1934, traveled extensively all over Europe; has been many times to England, Germany, Switzerland, Poland, Belgium, Italy, Algeria and Tunisia.

Went to Camp "A", "E", "The Farm", and also completed, successfully, the "Order of Battle" course (short) given at the Pentagon Building. Applied then for his commission, passed before the Board, and had to take his physical. Was disqualifed on account of a border case of diabetes. Had the same examination made by his own Doctor, Dr. Kirby Martin, 115 East 61st Street, New York City, who advised him that he did not have to follow a special diet, nor have to take drugs of any kind. Dr. Martin sent a letter to Mr. Haas' boss (Major George Sharp) to that effect. Mr. Haas then offered to sign a waiver but his desk told him that it could not be done. He was then transferred from S. O. to S. I., his desk now being Mr. H. Foster.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

General William J. Donovan, 1847 - 30th Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Colonel:

Richard de Roussey de Sales and Pierre Haas came down to see me yesterday, both of them perfectly red-headed because they cannot get into the fight somewhere. de Sales tells me that you know his brother very well, and that he has met you.

As you know I have known Pierre Haas some fifteen years. It seems that the army doctors found a slight heart murmur with respect to de Sales, and a slight trace of sugar in the case of Pierre Haas. Pierre Haas had a subsequent examination by competent medical authorities in New York and they told him that they could only find a trace, being the amount that they would expect to find in a man of his age. Both of these men are willing to sign waivers so that the army does not take any chances as far as they are concerned, but they are eager to get into France and do the kind of work which they think they are capable of doing.

When I told them your story about Oblensky, they were all the more determined to get into action. They said they felt confident that they were in as good physical condition as Oblensky could be at his age.

I told them that I would drop you a note, because that was the only way I knew how to help them.

Sincerely,

George

P.S. The Italian boy I introduced to you in Washington, Captain Peter Trerotola, is now at an embarkation camp of officers, and will probably be sent overseas within the next month. If you want him, this will be your last chance to get him.

~~MEMORANDUM FOR MR. KENNEDY,
Special Assistant to Director, OSS~~

Following the recent exchange of memoranda concerning Mr. Francis X. Di Lucia, the Department telegraphed the American Minister in Lisbon that the Di Lucia situation would be discussed by Mr. Gregory Thomas immediately upon his arrival in Lisbon and would be settled in a manner satisfactory to the Minister. Given below is a paraphrase of Minister Fish's reply (Mo. 1122 of May 21 1943):

"I appreciate very much the Department's telegram Mo. 894 of May 20 1943; however I feel obliged to request that Di Lucia be withdrawn immediately. Mr. Wood, the new Financial Attaché, arrived yesterday and I believe that in the interest of his future usefulness his association with Di Lucia ought to be as brief as possible. The relations of the latter with the British here in Lisbon are very critical over what they consider to be the failure of this Mission to get Di Lucia removed. Every day that he stays here creates more difficulty."

I should appreciate your having this matter referred promptly to the appropriate officials of the Office of Strategic Services so that prompt action may be taken on the Minister's request. All interested officers of this Department are in agreement that Mr. Di Lucia should be withdrawn from Portugal immediately.

I present herewith memorandum and cable bearing so by the Department of State concerning further activities of Di Lucia, resulting in embarrassment to U.S. interests as represented by the Legation in Portugal and the Embassy in Madrid.

I attach previous memoranda on this subject. Ambassador Hayes had requested the immediate recall of Di Lucia from the Iberian Peninsula some months ago. Following conversations with David Bruce and others at that time, I represented to the Department that because of the return to this country of Olivenz, OSS interests would be placed in jeopardy if Di Lucia were also withdrawn. The Department accordingly agreed not to insist on his immediate withdrawal, provided no completed arrangements for his replacement as rapidly as possible. He was therefore allowed to remain in Lisbon temporarily on the basis of that understanding.

Special Assistant to Director, OSS

Enclosed, for the confidential information of appropriate officers of the OSS, is a copy of strictly confidential despatch No. 928 of April 14, 1943, from the American Minister to Lisbon.

In connection with this new incident involving Di Lucia, the following is submitted for your consideration:

1. The Ambassador in Madrid requested, when Di Lucia left Spain, that he not be permitted to remain in the Iberian Peninsula.
2. Di Lucia really has no official status in Lisbon. When Oliviera, the former Financial Attaché, was removed from Portugal, Di Lucia took over his work and has been there ever since, but he never received any designation from the Department.
3. Mr. James E. Wood was proposed by the Treasury Department to replace Oliviera on February 9, 1943, and the Department approved his assignment. Although he has never proceeded to his post, it is understood that he will leave within the near future. There appears to be no reason for Di Lucia to remain in Lisbon after Wood's arrival.

The State Department is of the opinion that Mr. Di Lucia should be removed from the Iberian Peninsula at the earliest practicable date. Will you kindly let me know whether this is contemplated in view of the assignment of Mr. Wood?

Subject: Dealings of the Financial Attaché with Prominent Spanish Monarchists and Political Refugees.

The Honorable
The Secretary of State
Washington

Sir:

I feel obliged to report to the Department the following circumstances surrounding a meeting which took place between the Acting Financial Attaché of this Legation and two prominent political refugees from Spain who are at present in Lisbon. One of these refugees is the air force Colonel Ansaldi, whose flight to Portugal and internment here was reported in Madrid's 635, March 16, 9 p.m., and 705, March 24, 11 p.m. As mentioned in the latter message, these men, since their arrival in Portugal, have been the subject of much attention, and the question of their possible extradition has apparently caused serious friction between the Spanish and Portuguese Governments.

On the evening of April 12, the Military Attaché reported to the Counsellor of the Legation that he had been warned by a Spanish acquaintance that the two refugees, who were at the time interned in a Lisbon hotel, were to have received a visit the same afternoon from a representative of the American Legation. The Spaniard had pointed out the danger attendant on such a visit. He had said that the Germans were watching the two refugees night and day, and that nothing could suit them better than to be able to establish some connection between these men and the English or Americans, in order to prove to France, on the one hand, that the Monarchist movement in Spain was really only an intrigue of the Anglo-Saxon powers, and on the other, that our representatives were encouraging opposition to him.

An officer of the Legation spoke with Mr. Di Lucia, Acting Financial Attaché, later in the evening. The latter, who was somewhat surprised that the affair had become known, admitted that he had made this visit. He said that the initiative in arranging the visit had been taken by an acquaintance of his, the former Cuban Charge at Vichy, Mr. Guerra, who was staying at the same hotel with the two Spaniards. Guerra had asked him to drop in in the afternoon for tea and to meet the Spanish officers at that time. He had taken certain precautions not to be observed and thought that his visit was not known. The Spaniards, he said, had tried to talk about the "Casablanca conference", but he had refused to discuss any political matters. Ansaldi said that he had, just prior to his departure from Spain, discussed the subject with Beaumae. Di Lucia did agree, on Ansaldi's request, to transmit a message to his principals.

in the United States. He also accepted for transmission a letter from one of the Spaniards addressed to "Mr. D. Andrew Carnegie" of New York. The letter is described by Mr. Gruen as being a prominent Philippine business man.

The Department can draw its own conclusions from this incident, which affects our Embassy in Spain as well, if not more, than this Legation. I should only like to invite attention to the statement made on page 5 of my despatch no. 762 of January 4, 1943 to the effect that it would not be advisable for Mr. Leahy to remain permanently in Lisbon for the reason that "anyone filling a high position in this work here should be able to function in complete harmony with our establishment in Madrid". I must also point out that I assume that this action on the part of the Financial Attaché, detrimental as it may possibly be to our interests here and in Spain, was not predicted by the vague and overly-broad instructions under which he operates. The undesirability of this situation was pointed out on page 6 of the same despatch. Yet on this point, as in the case of the permanent changes, no effective action has been taken on the Legation's recommendations.

I know of no steps that I can usefully take, in these circumstances, to avoid future incidents of this sort, with the attendant possible embarrassment to the Embassy in Spain and to the general political interests of our Government in the peninsula, except to reiterate the recommendations mentioned above and to express the hope that the Department will give early attention to the problems arising from the present unsatisfactory status of the Financial Attaché's office in this city.

Respectfully yours,

Bert Fish

In spite of circumstances which may have created impressions to the contrary, based upon which has developed in the relationship between the former Financial Attaché in Madrid and the Ambassador has been accorded serious consideration, based on a desire to give full cooperation. It has been difficult to initiate a full investigation as well as to issue instructions which could be transmitted and received promptly. Major Bruce has handed me the attached memorandum, which I submit for your consideration and an explanation of the aforementioned circumstances. It would be appreciated if F. D. could be permit ed to remain in Lisbon.

TO: Mr. Wm. A. Klabel
FROM: David Bruce
SUBJECT: Your memorandum of December 4, 1947, transmitting paraphrases of State Department telegram No. 2054 of December 4

I should appreciate it if you could transmit to the proper party or parties in the State Department the substance of the following information:

At the time we were advised of Ambassador Heyen's original request that the Financial Attaché in Madrid (F. Di.) be recalled "for consultation", our Chief Representative in Lisbon was in this country on leave. As F. Di. was in Lisbon at the time, temporarily replacing our Chief Representative there, and we felt it to be most undesirable, in view of the critical situation then existing, that both our Chief Representatives on the Iberian Peninsula should be absent at the same time, we cabled F. Di. to remain in Lisbon and not to return to Madrid pending further instructions. In view, however, of Ambassador Heyen's obvious desire to avoid possible embarrassment from confronting F. Di. with the charges brought against him by the Ambassador, we did not advise F. Di. of the fact that his recall had been requested.

F. Di. was thus left without knowledge of the fact that there was any difficulty between him and the Ambassador and understood that he was to remain in Lisbon merely because of the temporary absence of his colleague there.

On December 3 we received a cable from F. Di., stating that, with the approval of the Minister in Lisbon, he planned to leave on December 4 for Madrid for two days. This cable was, in effect, a request for our approval of the trip and had undoubtedly been sent some days previous to its receipt by us. We have no way of knowing the exact time of dispatch of cables sent by our representatives through the State Department and it was impossible for us to get a message to F. Di. prior to his departure instructing him not to make the proposed trip. He thus left Lisbon without knowledge of the position taken by the Ambassador with respect to him and with the assumption that we had at least acquiesced in his making the trip by reason of our failure to reply to his cable advising us of his intention to make it.

Under these circumstances, while F. Di.'s return to Madrid was contrary to our instructions, it can hardly be taken as evidence of mental unbalance. In fact, we have seen no indications of lack of mental stability on his part.

As F. Di. had returned to Madrid, we advised him there of prohibiting him to return to Lisbon immediately and advising him that these instructions were dictated by the Ambassador's request for his recall. This is the message referred to in the Ambassador's telegram of December 8. We have since learned that it applied to Madrid while F. Di. was in Barcelona, was decoded and shown to the Ambassador who, as indicated in his telegram, thought best not to show it to F. Di.

It was our feeling that, in view of the excellent service F. Di. had rendered, he was not only entitled to some explanation of the instructions prohibiting him to return to his post in Madrid, but that the best way of clarifying the entire matter would be for the Ambassador to discuss the situation with his Financial Attaché.

While it has been impossible for us to make a full investigation of the charges brought against F. Di., we have reason to believe that certain of the most serious of these charges resulted from friction within the Embassy and would not have withstood an investigation by the Ambassador. From our point of view, and insofar as we are able to judge, F. Di.'s work has been excellent and we consider him to be a most useful man. We appreciate the impossibility under the circumstances of maintaining him at his present post in Madrid, but we should greatly appreciate the cooperation of the State Department in our being able to maintain him at his present temporary position in Lisbon, pending his transfer elsewhere. Our work in furthering potential military needs would be seriously handicapped if he were ordered out before we could provide adequate and experienced replacement.

The following communication has been handed to me by the Department of State, although the substance of it had been conveyed to us some time ago:

"To complete your files concerning F. Diliuska, I am giving below a paraphrase of Ambassador Hayes' telegram no. 2004 of December 8, 1942:

"In spite of my very specific request that this man be brought back for consultation, the OSS telegraphed him that I had demanded his recall. The fact that he returned here in direct violation of orders is evidence that he is mentally unbalanced. I cannot possibly be responsible for what he does and particularly for the extent to which he may reveal even further his connection with the OSS, to the great embarrassment of our Government, if he is given the least inkling of the reason why he was ordered home. For that reason I have not shown him the entire telegram. Will you kindly insist that the OSS exercise more discretion as well as consideration for our position at this very critical stage of our relations with Spain."

I have just received the following communication from the Department of State:

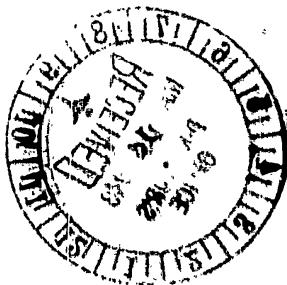

"Confirming our telephone conversation of November 10, 1942, I am giving below a paraphrase of a strictly confidential telegram no. 1731 of November 9, 1942 addressed by the American Ambassador at Madrid to the Secretary of State. Mr. Shaw asks that prompt action be taken on the Ambassador's request.

"I have to report that the Financial Attaché here is showing increasing signs of fundamental mental instability, the result of which is to make his presence here a real menace to our security. He distributes money about like a drunken sailor; is dangerously indiscreet, and in various ways advertises his special status. Complaints about his indiscretions have been sent to London by his British colleagues, who refuse to cooperate with him further.

"I must request that he be asked to return home at once for consultation and that he not be allowed to engage in such work either here or elsewhere."

I have a meeting with Shaw today and shall endeavor to have action postponed. I shall report to you.

THE LESSONS LEARNED

I.—THE LESSONS IN SUMMARISED FORM

321. The need for overwhelming fire support including close support, leaving the initial stages of the attack.
322. The necessity for the formation of permanent naval assault groups with a coherence comparable to that of any other first-line fighting formations. Army formations intended for amphibious assaults must without qualification train in close co-operation with naval assault forces.
323. The necessity for planning a combined operation at a combined Headquarters where the Force Commanders and their staff can work and live together.
324. The necessity to plan a raid so as to be independent of weather conditions to the greatest possible degree. A plan based on the assumption that weather conditions will be uniform is very likely to fail; therefore a plan which can be carried out even when they are different is most essential.
325. The necessity for flexibility in the military plan and its execution.
326. To achieve this, the assault must be on the widest possible front limited only by the possibilities of control and the amount of naval and air support available.
327. The allocation to the assault of the minimum force required for success and the retention of the maximum force as a reserve to exploit success where it is achieved.
328. The necessity for as accurate and comprehensive a system of control and communications as it is possible to establish.
329. The dissemination of knowledge to officers and other ranks, each of whom should know the intention of his superior, the outline of the operation and the details of the task of his own unit and those on the flanks.
330. The value of special training, particularly in amphibious night operations. Such training must include rehearsals and the testing of inter-communication arrangements.
331. The necessity for fire support in any operation where it has not been possible to rely on the element of surprise. This fire support must be provided by heavy and medium Naval bombardment, by air action, by special vessels or craft working close inshore, and by using the fire power of the assaulting troops while still sea-borne. Special close support craft, which should be gun-boats or some form of mobile fort, do not exist and must be designed and constructed.
- Support by the Royal Air Force is effective within the limits imposed by time and space.
332. Assaults must be carefully timed. Whether to assault in darkness, at dawn or dusk or in daylight, must depend on the nature of the raid, and on certain conditions, such as tide and distance, which will vary in every case.
333. Tanks should not be landed until the anti-tank defences have been destroyed or cleared. E.G.I. carrying tanks must not linger on the beaches beyond the time required to disembark their loads.
334. Great and continuous attention must be paid to security problems and greater use made of subordinate officers who should be put partly into the picture, so that they can control the men under them. Only important extracts from Operation Orders should be taken ashore. These should be kept in manuscript form and have their official headings removed.
335. Briefing of the troops should take place as late as possible.
- If airborne troops are used, arrangements must be made to increase the number of models available so as to cut down the time needed for briefing.
- Airborne troops provide means of achieving surprise and should be used as often as possible subject to the limitations of the weather. It should be regarded, however, as exceptional for a plan to depend for success entirely on their use.
336. Unless means for the provision of overwhelming close support are available, assaults should be planned to develop round the flanks of a strongly defended locality rather than frontally against it.
337. A far higher standard of aircraft recognition is essential both in the Royal Navy and the Army. This should be achieved by means of lectures, photographs and silhouettes. If possible, personnel of the Royal Observer Corps should be carried in ships.
338. Beach Signal parties should not land complete with the first wave, but only when the beach has been secured.
339. The importance and necessity of using smoke cannot be over emphasized and larger quantities of smoke must be carried in any operation of the size of the assault on Dieppe.
340. Some form of light or self-propelled artillery must be provided after an assault has got across the landing place and is making progress inland.

* Part V of this Confidential Book is also being printed separately in order that it may be given a wider circulation.

THE LESSONS IN DETAIL

III GENERAL OBSERVATION

III. NAVAL FIRE SUPPORT

The naval fire support was excellent. The accuracy of the naval gunners was remarkable. The naval bombardment was well timed and well directed. The naval bombardment was well timed and well directed. III. THE FORMATION OF ASSAULT FORCES

- (a) The organization of the assault forces must be based on the principle of the division of labour. The assault forces must be organized into assault groups, each group having its own commander and his staff, working and living together. This principle applies to the assault groups, and also to the assault ships and craft.
- (b) The assault forces must be organized into assault groups, each group having its own commander and his staff, working and living together. This principle applies to the assault groups, and also to the assault ships and craft.
- (c) The assault forces must be organized into assault groups, each group having its own commander and his staff, working and living together. This principle applies to the assault groups, and also to the assault ships and craft.

- (f) The assault forces must be organized into assault groups, each group having its own commander and his staff, working and living together. This principle applies to the assault groups, and also to the assault ships and craft.

III. THE NEED FOR A COMBINED HEADQUARTERS

- (a) The Naval, Military and Air Force Commanders and the supreme commander or other responsible for launching the operation will usually have their own Headquarters, each independent. In a Combined Operation Headquarters, a permanent staff and various agencies are provided especially for the Naval, Military and Air Force Commanders and their staffs, for all operations mounted under the Chief of Combined Operations.
- (b) The vital difference made to the planning of a combined operation when the supreme commander is separated by an experienced Inter-service staff and the detailed plans by the three commanders and their staffs working and living together has been amply demonstrated in the Maginot, Bruneval and St Nazaire raids, and was again in the D-Day operation.
- (c) During an assault, it is, of course, essential that the Naval and Military Forces Commanders should be abreast in a specially equipped Headquarters group, and situated close enough to the battle to be in a position to take and implement decisions immediately affecting the course of the action.

III. PERIOD DURING WHICH AN OPERATION CAN BE UNDERTAKEN

- (a) The overriding factor of all operations against the enemy in the other side of the Channel is the weather. Weather conditions need not be the same for all types of operations. Operations such as the assault on Dieppe is to be made when the weather conditions are such that it can be carried out differ from those which can be accepted in an operation involving long distance flying on the enemy occupied coast. The problem of aircraft operations is compounded by the fact that conditions required by the Royal Navy are not necessarily the same as those required by the Royal Air Force and vice versa.
- (b) The Dieppe raid showed clearly that for a raid in which the Navy and air force depend on full air protection, good visibility is essential, and this condition is not always easy to obtain especially in bad weather. The operation against Dieppe could not have been taken place if the cloud had been more than four thousand feet at 1000 hours. The wind had been more than Force 8 or if there had been an appreciable swell. The weather would not have been enough to make a withdrawal feasible. These conditions seldom occurred during June, July and August, 1942. Furthermore, an previous operation had been postponed and subsequently cancelled because the weather conditions were worse than those required. Even on 19th August, conditions were not ideal, and they were aggravated by the Chief of Combined Operations giving a forecast which was very much less favourable than could have been desired. So much was this so that the operation was within the advantages' lighter war is the open sea presenting constantly difficult weather one of the main causes for the postponement of the long planned operations in the other half of Air operation - in the D-Day with the condition of the weather in operation can take place is increased for the days preceding the assault which must conditions in which the last cannot operate with certainty especially in the early morning.

- (c) The conditions governing an repetition in which the assault will change in which are different from those which must prevail during a night. The troops must be withdrawn they can be put ashore in much more ~~safely~~ with a wind of force 6 and considerable swell. Here however the existing difficulties have not been removed their magnification. To supply troops in short over open water under these conditions similar to those needed for a raid unless the circumstances in the assault should the weather deteriorate of the supply carrying staff in over inclement weather can be accepted.
- (d) The conclusion must therefore be that once it is impossible to mount an assault on which cannot with certainty take place in the average year it follows that it will have to be planned as to be independent of tidal conditions or the greater part of the day. This was seen in the Dieppe raid which could have been carried out on 12 days in every month, thus making it virtually certain that it could take place during the summer months. An operation, however, involving the occupation of many held areas will be a succession of days in which the weather conditions are favourable in the landing beaches. They are principally dependent on the time required to capture a port or sheltered waters of suitable dimensions. Such a succession of days can never be relied on when operating on beaches which all face one way and are set about in prevailing winds. Consequently an assault made with the intention of remaining where should be planned to take place in an area capable of being supplied over beaches which turn in different directions, or in an area where a port or sheltered anchorage is ready to fall into our hands at a very early stage. In other words a plan based on the assumption that weather conditions will be uniform is very likely to fail and therefore a plan which can be carried out even when they are indifferent or bad is essential.

348 FLEXIBILITY

- (a) The chances and opportunities of an assault landing are extremely difficult to gauge in advance. The military plan must, therefore, be flexible in order to enable the commander to apply force where force has already succeeded.
 - (b) The axiom, normal in land warfare, that it is impracticable to conform a hold-up is even more strongly applicable in the assault phase of an opposed landing. Success, in the latter type of operation a hold up almost invariably means that there is little if no room for manoeuvre.
- Thus, to put in more troops where the leading waves have not succeeded in penetrating the immediate defences, is likely to increase the target without increasing the prospects of success. This was again brought out at Dieppe.
- (c) If the military plan is to be flexible, then certain basic requirements must be accepted and must be embodied in the general arrangements for the operation. These requirements are discussed in paragraphs 349 to 354.
 - (d) It must be recorded, however, that with the state of training of the landing craft crews which prevailed at the time of the Dieppe operation a flexible military plan could not have been put into execution. It is only by the formation of the permanent Naval forces advocated in paragraph 345 (a) that the requisite standard of training can be achieved. The greater the number of experienced Royal Navy officers available, the shorter will be the period of training required by these forces.

349. THE WIDTH OF THE FRONT WHICH CAN BE ASSAULTED

- (a) If flexibility is to be a true characteristic of the plan, then the initial assault must cover several landing places. If, to take an extreme case, the assault is made across only one beach, then there is clearly little the military commander can do to make his arrangement flexible, for he will be dependent on success in one area, and must either batter his way through or fail.
- (b) It must be appreciated, however, that the following factors will qualify and limit the width of the front and the number of landing places which can be attacked with advantage.
 - (i) The frontage which can be controlled by the Headquarters organisation which is possible to set up on the spot and the number of physically suitable beaches within that frontage.
 - (ii) The amount and type of support from the Naval forces and the air which can be made available.
 - (iii) The size of the military force and the nature and composition of the Naval assault force which have been allotted to it and the organization and skill of that force.

On the other hand, the need for a rapid assault operation does not necessarily mean that the assault force must be concentrated in one place. It may be better to divide the assault force into two or more groups, each supported by its own naval force, so that the assault force can be deployed over a wide area. This would also allow the assault force to be deployed at different times, which would give the assault force more time to prepare for the assault.

The assault force should be well prepared for the assault. This includes having enough supplies, equipment, and personnel to support the assault force. The assault force should also be well trained and have a clear understanding of their mission. The assault force should also be well supported by its naval force, which should provide the assault force with the necessary resources and information to support the assault.

The assault force should also be well supported by its ground forces, which should provide the assault force with the necessary resources and information to support the assault. The assault force should also be well supported by its air force, which should provide the assault force with the necessary resources and information to support the assault.

15. CONTROL AND COMMUNICATIONS*

(a) The most effective plan will be one which is well thought out and clearly defined. It should be agreed that the assault force must be well prepared for the assault and that the assault force must be well supported by its naval force.

(b) The assault force must be well supported by its naval force, which should provide the assault force with the necessary resources and information to support the assault.

(c) The assault force must be well supported by its ground forces, which should provide the assault force with the necessary resources and information to support the assault.

(d) A point to consider is what the assault force must do if it is unable to reach its destination due to the services of the enemy. In this case, the assault force must be able to reach its destination in a HOD ship, which is a type of ship used for assault operations.

Such a ship must be able to reach its destination in a minimum of time, and it must be able to support work and communications equipment, as well as other equipment, such as a radio system, in a satisfactory manner if the ship is properly fitted for performance.

(e) Adequate Naval Signal preparation for the assault force is important, especially if the assault force is engaged in the operation.

(f) Alternative channels for the passing of information between assault force and naval force.

(g) In this connection, it is suggested that the assault force should use a simple method. For example, visual signals should be employed whenever possible, and visual signals should be used, as well as other methods, although the latter are not explicitly mentioned.

(h) On Army channels, it is recommended that the assault force establish and expand alternative channels by which information can be passed. It is recommended that the same intelligence may be obtained from the Army's command channels, and at about the same time, as is practicable. Other channels of information may be used, if necessary. The essential requirement is that information should be available when it should arrive and that links should be established by which the assault force can communicate with the minimum delay.

(i) In the Naval organisation, and the Army, and although implicit, the assault force must be practised in the use of various types of equipment, such as ships, aircraft, and equipment which may be used in the assault. It is recommended that the assault force should be able to control the assault force, and the assault force should be able to support the assault force. The assault force cannot be accepted. The suggestion of the assault force should be to first consider whether or not the assault force can carry out the assault in a satisfactory manner.

(j) Good information and the power to act upon it are essential in all operations. It is important to be too strongly emphasised that the need for a well-trained assault force, especially during the assault phase of a combined operation where assault units must be strengthened by lack of them form an impenetrable barrier.

(k) Much may depend upon the efficiency of the assault force, and the assault force should be well supported by its naval force, and the assault force should be well supported by its ground forces, and the assault force should be well supported by its air force.

* The lessons learnt concerning Control and Communications are also dealt with in Annex 10 and Appendix pp. 163 and 177.

It is important to ensure the plan and its importance is a matter known amongst all those who should know the intention of his superior and the nature of the operation he is about to undertake and the detail of the plan should be distributed to his own men and in those in the theatre. Want of such knowledge will result in difficulties faced by the subordinate commanders and they will be expected to know how best to take advantage of a favourable situation or vice versa under the operation as a whole.

(b) Dissemination of knowledge - the extent contemplated in the preceding note regarding the preparation and access to sea and land facilities such as mobile photographic and other means. The use of such facilities is, of course, bound up with the difficult problem of secrecy which is dealt with later in the paragraph 6(2).

151 REHEARSALS

- (a) No combined operation should be launched until it has been adequately rehearsed.
- (b) Rehearsals need not necessarily always be complete. If, for instance, the operation can be practised frequently without the usual interruption from landing craft using included, usually, the inter-communication system between ships, there need not be worked up without all set in and hand forces being present.
- (c) After partial rehearsals, rehearsals on a larger scale may be feasible. No general rule can be laid down and commanders must consider each case on its merits.
- (d) It is particularly important that all sea-borne military headquarters should be given adequate opportunity for practice. They will at any rate during the initial stage of an operation be working in unfamiliar and probably cramped conditions. The head of one of the headquarters and the first placing of the inter-communication and intelligence staff cannot be satisfactorily settled by discussions over a telegram. Such discussions must terminate in full dress rehearsals with all ships headquarters fully represented.

154 VALUE OF SPECIAL TRAINING

- (a) There is no doubt that units or sub-units allotted specific tasks require specialised training for that task. For example, training for tasks which include street fighting or bombardment work or attacks on pill boxes or on battery positions should all be carried out over similar ground and distances and under conditions of light the same as those which may be expected in the operation itself. The more perfect the training the more perfect is the operation likely to be.
- (b) It should be realized that the number of persons possessing night vision above the normal is very small and that there are many more who have night vision below the normal. It is therefore imperative that tests should be carried out with the object of selecting personnel for key positions in the assault whose night vision is adequate. Admiralty Fleet Order No. 3977/42 gives the details of a simple little instrument for carrying out these tests. Special training is also needed to develop and improve night vision.
- (c) Without adequate sea training and opportunities of practice, military assault units will inevitably find themselves hampered and at a disadvantage. Though such training is necessary, it must however, come after that of the Naval formations taking part in the assault.

155 SUPPORT FOR THE ASSAULT

- (a) Leaving out of consideration the long preparatory bombardments for the reduction of "key" major coast defences which would be a necessary feature of invasion plans but cannot, for obvious reasons, be a preface to raids, the assault in both raids and invasions, of a defended coast requires fire support while it is in progress, unless complete surprise can be obtained.
- (b) Surprise is likely to become progressively more difficult with the passage of time, and support fire more necessary as the enemy increases his defences.
- (c) If the assault is to take place under fire support, it must, in volume and effect, be comparable to that which would be available to a brigade attacking a strongly defended position in normal land warfare. The latter would, assuming a normal allocation of army field and medium artillery, amount to -
 - (i) Close support weapons - One 6-pdr for each 100 yards of objective.
 - (ii) Neutralising weapons - One 25-pdr for each 20 yards of objective.
 - (iii) Counter-battery weapon - 5.5-in and 7.2-in Howitzer. Sufficient to engage each enemy battery covering the assault beaches with 30 rounds every 30 seconds or a total of about 140 guns on a brigade front of 2,000 yards.

This figure ignores the support of mortar fire which would be available to a brigade and the greater accuracy of guns on fixed platforms as compared with ship or craft-borne guns, and should then be regarded as a strict minimum.

The following table gives the results obtained by the author in 1903, and by Mr. J. W. D. G. Smith in 1904, for the determination of the specific heat of the various components of the atmosphere. The values given by Mr. Smith are based on the assumption that the specific heat of air is unity, and the values given by the author are based on the assumption that the specific heat of air is 1.000. The values given by Mr. Smith are based on the assumption that the specific heat of air is unity, and the values given by the author are based on the assumption that the specific heat of air is 1.000.

157 SUPPORT BY HEAVY AND MEDIUM NAVAL BOMBARDMENT

- (a) At Dropped at intermediate range, the aircraft would have been destroyed by impact forces. The aircraft would have been destroyed by impact forces. At short range, the aircraft survived.

(b) On the other hand, if larger drops were supplied with tandem impact charges, and the impact force was high enough, the accuracy of the drops could be increased by increasing the number of tandem charges which had been proposed.

(c) Thus the conclusion is drawn that the following steps must be taken in order to prepare for the next test:

 - (i) The impact charges used in the drops must be designed to withstand the impact forces which will probably be generated.
 - (ii) The position of the impact charges must be arranged so as to withstand the impact forces which will be generated.
 - (iii) The impact charges must be arranged so as to withstand the impact forces which will be generated.

ENGLISH SUPPORT BY AIR ACTION. I. ACTION BY CANNON-FIGHTERS

- (d) The attack on the central position of the force assault front by May 1945, following the capture, both preceded by some night raids, was a further example of the same. The latter were particularly effective because of the lack of anti-aircraft fire. The K-11 influence, which had been given to Cannon Spotters, went far in assisting them in getting away from their assigned positions.
 - (e) Such support has a considerable morale value, as the following incidents all show. In one case it is drawn away for a few minutes to help to bring down a target, and in another, it is forming up to attack. At the latter, the gunners are given a signal to fire, while the gunners of the cannon fighters and experts are given a new signal. A V.A. unit was once assigned a new signal.
 - (f) It must be appreciated of how vital that signal is, as it is the key to a successful bombing operation. For instance, it can not be expected that a gunner will always be available on his gun at the right time to allow the bombers to pass. He may be occupied with other work or such like, or he may be unable to get to his gun. So there are times when he has got to leave the gun, and the bombers are out of action. Further, the gunners in regular combat patrols often fly in under cover of darkness, and then get into a dangerous situation during the day.
 - (g) Lastly, it is particularly necessary for a night fighter to know his responsibilities against the night fighters as possible risks are likely. The gunners will have given him a signal to fire, and he must normally participate in programme, namely, dropping the bomb as quickly as possible, and toward the limit of their ordnance. This is a very important point, as it is necessary to drop sufficiently long time in advance. The cannon fighters may be asked to assist in providing a diversionary attack, with that, the gunners' strategy. Cannon fighters, therefore, have to be given the time to freeze to stand and wait, so as always to be ready with them. 100 rounds of gun ammunition has been made for an adequate number of targets.

Note - Before the Chinese in the North Sea, it is very probable that the use of these would not be justified, because of their vulnerability to air attacks.

189. II. SUPPORT BY HIGH LEVEL BOMBING

- (a) The plan for Dieppe did not include high level bombing apart from the assault by suitable day bombers such as Ansons. It is necessary to recall that in sufficient numbers this decision might well have been different. In the case of Dieppe by surprise by night bombing only.
 - (i) Surprise would have been lost because the bombing would have had to take place at the same time before the assault as orders allow. In addition, it would have to be certain that target really down and to have been effective. The height of the attack would have had to be longer than it is in the normal practice, such as if night attacks.
 - (ii) It would have been difficult to decide of the programmes which must be suspended and the suitable from damaged planes might kill the crews and prevent the achievement of tasks.
 - (ii) High level bombing was unlikely to damage many of the set front positions so much heavy fire was brought to bear in the landing places.
 - (iii) In order to enable H.M.S. "Lancast" and the cutting out party to perform their tasks it was necessary to avoid damage to the harbour installations and the houses.
- (b) Against these points, however, it may be argued that
 - (i) surprise would not necessarily have been given away had the bombing been part of a programme of attacks on coastal ports, including perhaps one or two previous raids on Dieppe itself.
 - (ii) Inconveniences might to some extent have been avoided by the use of a few expert path finders who could have indicated the target by flares.
 - (iii) Rubble in the streets might not have proved a worse obstacle than the undamaged road blocks and obstruction walls which were encountered.
 - (iv) Though particular defence positions might not have been damaged the personnel might have been killed or wounded while on the way to man them.
 - (v) The moral effect of a heavy raid and the suspicion that it comes cannot be overlooked.
- (c) The fair conclusion to draw seems to be that the question whether or not high level bombing should be included in the plan is an open one and that no hard and fast induction should be drawn.
 - (i) Each case must be judged on its merits having regard to the pros and cons mentioned above and to the possibility of diverting bomber effort from other and perhaps more important programmes.
 - (ii) In connection with air support, generally, it is of obvious importance to note the recent developments in daylight bombing and to consider how they may affect the planning of an assault.
 - (iii) It is only fair to add that large scale night bombing of towns in France is against the general policy of His Majesty's Government, although an exception might have been made in the case of Dieppe had the Force Commanders really wanted it.

190. III. AIR ATTACKS ON ENEMY REINFORCEMENTS

- (a) Once an assault on any scale has been launched it will almost invariably be important to prevent or at least delay the move up of enemy reinforcements. If an action to this end is likely to be required, this must be arranged for in the plan.
Probably the easiest way of doing this is to hold suitable squadrons at all for the purpose and to organise operations by intruder aircraft at night and Tactical Reconnaissance aircraft by day along the likely approaches so that early warning can be obtained that enemy forces are on the move. Tactical reconnaissance by aircraft proved adequate at Dieppe though the casualties suffered were heavier than those inflicted on aircraft employed on other tasks.
- (b) There is little doubt that in a large scale operation, or when an assault is made in an area particularly suited to rapid reinforcement by the enemy, air action against enemy communication centres, barracks and camps will have to be undertaken as part of a set programme, which may have to be initiated some days or even weeks before the raid.
When summing up the relative importance of retarding or preventing the movement of enemy reinforcements it should be borne in mind that though the coastal defences may be formidable, they are fixed in character.
This, once a breach has been made, the danger of serious counter attack comes not so much from the garrisons of other fixed defences in the neighbourhood as from mobile reserves outside the immediate area of the assault. These reserves should be attacked from the air as and when opportunity offers.

• It is considered that the importance of the presence of the aircraft carrier force in the vicinity of the assault area is to be much larger than the presence of the major naval force. The lack of early type support aircraft would have been a serious disadvantage if the opposition had subsequently attacked.

361 IV THE SCALE OF AIR SUPPORT ACCORDING TO RELATION TO THIS SCALE IN THE LAND OPERATION

- (a) It is of particular interest to note that in respect of a ground assault force, the factor concerned with the size of the assault force is the proportionate scale of the enemy's air support force. This is particularly important in view of the fact that the opposition's air force was relatively small. That opposition however would increase its air force during the course of operations in the initial period of attack. If the assault force were to be increased, it would be necessary to increase the size of the air force correspondingly.
- (b) The problem is not however so simple as might at first appear. There are two main factors which must be considered in respect of the size of the air force required. These are the strength of the opposition's air force and the time interval between the landing of the assault force and the arrival of the reinforcements. The first factor is important in respect of the number of sorties required to enable the Air Force to inflict maximum damage on the opposition's air force and, in this case, the landing of the assault force must be as far as possible to the rear of the opposition's air force. The second factor is the probability of the increased use of night sorties.
- (c) Enemy air attacks on ships were at times intense, but the name "A.V.A." brought by the close concentration of the ships greatly reduced the value of the medium low attacks. Such concentrations of fire may make it possible to concentrate in its neighbourhood and used for other purposes. Finally, spending ships and aircraft were only hit when detached. The morale of friendly shipping was high.
- (d) The enemy failed at any time to develop serious air attacks against the troops on shore.

362 SUPPORT BY SPECIAL VESSELS OR CRAFT WORKING CLOSE INSHORE

- (a) The assaults at Dieppe, particularly in the central beaches, showed in the most flagrant fashion the need for overwhelming fire support during the initial stages of the attack. It is during these vital minutes while troops are disembarking, cutting or digging their way through wire, clearing beach mines and finding cover, over distances that the need for close support is at its greatest. At the same time it is during this very period that the troops are least able to support themselves because there has not been time to organise and deploy supporting arms. The support that is available must therefore come from outside sources - for without it the assault will almost inevitably lose momentum and may end in a stalemate with the troops pinned to the beaches unable either to advance or to withdraw. Overwhelming support of the kind now envisaged should not only make the assault possible, but would also be of the greatest value in protecting the craft themselves from being disabled during the final closing on the beach and while beached.
- (b) It is quite certain that the "Support Craft" which are now available do not meet the requirement envisaged in the preceding paragraph. They are too lightly armed and too lightly armoured for continued action against the types of defences which the enemy has erected at all important points on the occupied coast line.
- (c) It must be remembered that though an assault may take place on a flank of the main objective, it is in itself a frontal attack. Thus once the assault is developed, there is little room for subtlety. The main necessity is to batter a way through in the shortest possible time.
- (d) In order to achieve this object it is considered that an entirely new type of support vessel is required which might be described as a small warship or an amphibious boat. There is also the technical possibility of a specially designed small mobile fort constructed in pieces permitting it to be brought to the scene of action and then sunk in position or as may be needed leaving only the gun turrets above water. This however would in the nature of things be more for barrage and counter battery work than suitable for direct close support against beach defences in the opening stage of the attack.

364 MILITARY SUPPORT DURING LANDING

- (a) Landing troops can add themselves to the column of covering fire by doing the following in various ways:
- (i) Self-propelled mobile artillery provided that it is put ashore immediately with power to fire at just one in covering the initial assault. In addition to fire from specially trained and fitted support craft such as the L.C.L. 4 M.D. and L.C.L. 3 M.D., smoke cover can also be given by the troops from the actual landing craft. In view of these latter type of craft, one or two Bren guns and, whenever possible, a 3-in mortar should be mounted ready for use. The Bren gun may be employed against other land or air targets while the 3-in mortar will be particularly valuable in providing smoke cover and in blanketing searchlights which may open up on the landing places.
 - (ii) It is to be noted that firing from landing craft requires a considerable amount of practice and that frequent opportunities for such practice must be arranged during the preparatory training period.

365 THE TIMING OF THE ASSAULT

- (a) In the Dieppe operation the assaults which took place in the first faint light of dawn (i.e. visibility of 200 yards) succeeded, whereas those that came in after dawn were unable to make so much progress. It would be very unwise however to draw any definite conclusions from this fact, because the daylight assaults which were those against the town itself were faced by defences which were far stronger and by difficulties which did not exist on the flanks.
- (b) Thus it is considered that the problem whether to land in darkness or in daylight is an open one and that each particular case must be judged in relation to the broad questions stated below:
- (i) Do the conditions of tide and moon, and the time which will be taken by the ships and craft on passage permit of a choice between a day and a night assault?
 - (ii) Do the circumstances of the operation indicate that a night assault will give a reasonable chance of tactical surprise? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, then it is considered that a good many risks and disadvantages can profitably be accepted in order to gain surprise. In this connection, the importance of having vessels and craft of sufficient speed is to be emphasized for good speed will very often not only make an assault possible that otherwise would be impracticable, but in many cases will achieve the additional advantages of a tactical surprise.
 - (iii) If a daylight assault is thought best, can it be said that the available means of support (including smoke) will be sufficient to deal with enemy defences unhampered by darkness?
 - (iv) If a night assault is thought best, can the following questions be answered satisfactorily?

Is the Naval assault force capable of accurately conducting an approach in the area concerned and does it possess the latest navigational aids necessary to make an accurate landfall?

Is there sufficient time available for the specialised training required by the Naval and Military personnel taking part?

- (c) All these questions are comprehensive and each one of them has many ramifications which must be examined by those who have to take the decision.
 - (d) Before reaching this decision there appears to be one further and fundamental question which the Commanders concerned should ask themselves. It is this—
- "Will a night assault allow me to accomplish something which I do not think I can equally well accomplish by a daylight assault?"

365 THE LANDING OF TANKS IN THE ASSAULT

- (a) At Dieppe the tanks, which were all landed in daylight with the leading waves in the face of defences which dominated the beach and against tank obstacles that had not been breached, found themselves in grave difficulties. The deduction to be drawn is that, unless overwhelming fire support is available, tanks should not be landed until defences have been captured and the obstacles cleared.

As far as possible, the operation should be planned so that the D-day date will be the earliest possible date at which they can be expected to be able to make contact with the beach.

453 BEACH RECONNAISSANCE

It is known that a proportion of the confirmed operations have been preceded by the provision of beach reconnaissance flights performed in complete secrecy. The information can be obtained from existing publications and records that the best way to develop the beach reconnaissance plan is to keep it sufficiently detailed so as to cover the entire planning period. It would be best to have a separate section for each photographic flight, the first of which should be concerned with the beach itself, the second with the water. It is whether tanks and assault troops can cross the beach successfully without being detected. Information concerning the beach may be obtained through photographs, or through the study of intelligence and operational reports. This information should be used but care must be taken that this information is not

457 SECURITY

- (a) One of the most difficult problems in security is the protection of the D-day date and security.
- (b) The D-day operator will be interested in simple ways of reducing his chances of being discovered before the actual operation. A very good example of this can be found in the preparation of the "D-day" card. This card is usually prepared by the G-2 and G-3 sections of the staff, and it is the responsibility of the G-2 to see that the card is destroyed after the operation is completed. The D-day operator can easily obtain a copy of this card and so gain a considerable advantage in planning his timing and the conduct of the initial attack phase.
- (c) The conditions of each operation will vary so much that the D-day operator will have to find out for himself the importance of security. In preparing his operation he must always bear in mind the importance of security.

Attention to detail is the only way to point

The main secret of security is simplicity. Security is mainly to be achieved by the use of the other services, especially the air, lighter and naval forces, many of whom cannot be prevented from indulging in operations which involve preparatory steps, such as, for example, the use of aircraft in the preparatory early stages. Although operations may be conducted in the dark, the D-day operator may easily focus the attention of a trained agent on the area concerned and he will then become what is called the "vanguard" of the enemy who will then allow such operations or direct attacks. Therefore, the D-day operator must be certain of the ship concerned. He ought therefore to have a detailed knowledge of the ship concerned, so that he can identify it and so that it can be put into the picture before any sort of attack can be made with an operation.

(ii) The item should be placed among the rest of the important documents, without dividing either the D-day or the place of the operation. With a training team or place much can be done to assist training teams in carrying out their detailed tasks. On the other side, they will have to work closely with the D-day operator and obstacles they will have to overcome and the time during which they will have to complete their task.

It will be necessary to discuss whether they can be used in the day or night or might work and to indicate whether there will be other guns operating on the flanks.

Armed with this information, the commanders will be able to relate their training to actual operational requirements and concentrate on the subjects that really matter. It is inevitable that those of an inspiring type will sense that an operation is being prepared, so they will not know when or where.

(iii) In certain cases, it may be found possible, without endangering the D-day operator, to use maps, models and photographs which bear no names.

The preparation of such aids requires time and demands great care. They should be used at an early stage in the planning if they are to be of real use.

(iv) It will be necessary throughout the preparatory stages to keep a strict record of all those who are aware of the operation. By this means, the issue of cards bearing the code name of the operation and the name and address of the holder has been found useful. Such cards, the issue of which should be severely restricted, authorise the holder to speak to another holder, but not to a non-holder, regarding the operation.

(v) Throughout the preparatory stages, the "G" and "Q" staffs of all three services must work closely together. If this is not the case, it may be found that the most carefully veiled arrangements by one branch are rendered entirely useless, through lack of knowledge on the part of the other.

- (a) The early production of a "cover" plan for the final stages reducing and only later training to a state where it is difficult to identify.
- (b) It must be realized that strategic surprise may be compromised through need the constitution of the force given away by the use of existing methods, or well known operational training used, unless this practice is rigorously thought out and regulated. The operations of units under the force may be necessarily to subject to strict discipline at the regimental level.
- (c) The administrative and equipment aspects of the assault problem can best apply to August 12, but it may be held better that the use of large quantities of stores, equipment and supplies to units ships and craft is left to private hand, each for specification and expense.
- (d) Difficulties encountered in trying to select an area in the South of England which can be completely sealed appear to be insurmountable. Any vigorous measure of control impossible to get even an island like the Isle of Wight completely sealed, unless the population. Much can be done however to effect this heavy coverage by the disruption of postal and telephone services, by cutting off telephone lines and by the installation of payphones throughout in hotels, public houses and places where gossip is likely to spread.
- (e) During the Dieppe operation complete copies of the Military Force Commander's Operations Order were taken ashore. It is not considered that there is any justification for such a rapid and that only important extracts such as code words or time tables need be included. In such in these cases, the numbers carried should be reduced to the minimum. These Commanders will in most cases be well advised to indicate in which the portions which may be added and those who are authorized to carry them. To prevent the enemy from a position to quote any of these portions which may be captured as being "useful" operational orders, these extracts should be copied in manuscript and have their official heading removed.

368 WHEN TO BRIEF TROOPS

- (a) In the first mounting of the Dieppe operation troops were briefed and embarked on the first day and thereafter had to remain "sealed" for the whole of the five days during which the operation was kept mounted, waiting for the weather to improve. In some of the smaller ships, which were only intended to ferry soldiers across, the discomfort and lack of space and facilities decreased the efficiency of the troops day by day.
- (b) It is therefore desirable to refrain, not only from briefing, but from embarking troops until a long range weather forecast shows some prospect of the weather becoming sufficiently settled to give really good chances of the operation coming off shortly after embarkation and briefing. This was done when the Dieppe operation was ~~not~~ mounted.
- (c) The briefing which has to be given to the aircrews and troops of the airborne division is of necessity much more complicated and, at present, the minimum time required is about four days for the aircrews and two days for the troops. Except in periods of set weather no weather forecast can extend to cover so long a period. It follows that briefing for the airborne division has to take place before there is any real prospect of knowing when the operation is coming off. Further, since the aircrews and troops are not embarked in ships but are scattered in camps, efficient "sealing" can only be done at the expense of focussing attention on the imminence of an operation. The time taken for briefing could probably be reduced to about twenty hours for airborne troops if facilities could be made available for the airborne Division to reproduce the requisite number of "models" for simultaneous briefing of all units concerned.

369 THE USE OF AIRBORNE TROOPS

- (a) In the original plan for the Dieppe operation Airborne Troops were included to deal with certain important batteries. In the final plan for the operation they were omitted. The participation of Airborne Troops calls for certain weather conditions, especially as far as light is concerned, and in so doing increases the odds against a particular operation taking place within the favourable period for moon and tide. In this respect the Dieppe report makes it clear that though the conditions on the day of the attack were satisfactory for ships and landing craft, they would not have permitted the use of Airborne Troops at the time required in the original plan. In fact, weather conditions suitable both for landing craft and Airborne Troops did not occur at all during the period. Thus, had the latter been included, the operation would have had to be cancelled.
- (b) It should be observed, however, that technique, equipment and methods are continually improving and that conditions which would be considered hazardous or impossible today may become far from impracticable in a few months time.

Attention: No one shall be allowed to obtain or use the code.

- However, as long as the system continues to operate, the primary hazard will be the potential for an explosion or fire.

There they also did not sleep. The men who were sent to the north side of the plain were ordered to stand in the field, and the men who were sent to the south side were ordered to stand in the field, and the men who were sent to the west side were ordered to stand in the field, and the men who were sent to the east side were ordered to stand in the field.

- (iii) The production of high quality, low cost, and reliable products.

CHOICE OF ASSAULT LANDING PLACES

- (a) The decision to assault landing places was dictated principally by the strategic interests of the Allies in the landing of the heavy bombers and the need to ensure that the assault troops could be brought ashore before the arrival of the heavy bombers. The timing of the assault was determined by the need to bring the assault troops ashore before the arrival of the heavy bombers.
 - (b) It is considered, however, that the assault landing places should have been selected more carefully than they were, so as to facilitate the assault rather than to assist the bombers.
 - (c) It is recognized that the decision regarding the choice of assault landing places was made on the basis of the information available at the time of the decision. The assault landing places chosen were based on the information available at the time of the decision, which was limited to the frontal defence, they were chosen to support the heavy bombers and other armoured units and heavy vehicles. These decisions were not fully understood by the bombardment, bombing or assault landing. What happened later was due to the wisdom of avoiding frontal attacks on such an objective as a port.

Naturally, the situation could be radically altered if the following circumstances were available during the early stages of the conflict, and so on, including the presence of a large number of well-trained and highly motivated fighters who had been prepared for the assault, but in the absence of such an opportunity, greater reliance must be placed on enveloping a strongly defended locality after the initial breakthrough.

This by no means excludes a frontal attack, if the leading troops are well prepared, and perhaps his reserves as well. On the other hand, every man in front of the position can diversion should be practised in order to mislead and distract him during the all important period when the leading troops are being loaded and are fighting in many cases like bridgeheads.

371 AIRCRAFT RECOGNITION

- (a) During the Doppo operation, there were many cases of our own aircraft being engaged by our own guns. Such incidents are always likely to occur in the heat of combat and every possible step must be taken to reduce them to an absolute minimum.

(b) The following measures are recommended:

 - The early issue to all ships and units of photographs and other records of various types of aircraft which will be acting as supports of the enemy, giving the exact aircraft likely to be seen. Doctors should use flying as an opportunity offset.
 - Arrangements to be made for aircraft of the various types to fly over ships and units during training and rehearsals. On such occasions, the Royal Observer Corps should, whenever possible, be given early warning of the type and the distinctive features by which it may be recognized.
 - During the operation itself, it will be unavoidable, especially round ports, especially from the Observer Corps, to be alert of the ships and landing places so that they are available to distinguish themselves from hostile aircraft at the earliest moment.
 - Pilots to be instructed to avoid as far as possible flying straight at ships, as the gun crews are bound to treat all aircraft flying straight at their ships as hostile.
 - The greatest possible use should be made of the present schools for aircraft recognition established at the various ports.

the object of getting the landing places situated away from the built-up areas.

6. In practice however it was found that the landing of complete assault troops was difficult enough. The first was that there presence caused breaking out of an open fire which was of the landing interests. The second was that if it happened the author of the plan would be compelled to plan the beach party was likely to become indifferent to his original idea and consider other conditions which might suggest a change in the original idea, perhaps even a revised body for some considerable time.
7. It is recommended therefore that technical experiments concerning landing methods should be conducted at least once on the beaching difficulties in daylight and that it should be the function of the naval officer in command of the assault force to see to it that the assault officer who should decide at what time the various elements of assault requirements for the assault parties are entirely his landed assault expert opinion is considered and then be passed before they had ended.

6.1 PROTECTION DURING PASSAGE

During the approach to the Channel, the first attacking ships will be vulnerable to air attack. Naval bombardment will be imprudent to assume that such a risk can always be run with impunity. It is therefore necessary for a heavy Naval bombardment to be prolonged than is available for the operation against Dieppe.

6.2 THE USE OF SMOKE

- (a) Given reasonable atmospheric conditions smoke properly used can be a very valuable aid to a combined operation.
 - i. It can nevertheless become a double-edged weapon if its employment is not most carefully planned between the three services.
 - ii. At Dieppe for instance it might have been helpful to cover the landing craft during the final stages of their approach and the initial stages of the landing itself or to provide the Naval bombardment of the opposite beach with some sorties of a smoke shell or alternatively to have laid a curtain of smoke across the front of the town by aircraft. If however smoke had been put down by either of these methods then the German fighters could not have been in time to make their attacks just before the landing, and in this case of smoke laid by aircraft, bombarding ships would probably have lost sight of their target too soon. The comparative advantages of a night attack and no smoke as against a smoke screen and a fighter attack had to be weighed and a decision reached. This related incident appears an excellent example of one of the numberless points directly affecting all three Services which inevitably crops up during the planning of a combined operation and which can only be settled by joint consideration and a joint decision on the part of the three commanders.
- b. The conditions for smoke during the Dieppe operation were excellent and the following methods were employed for producing it.
 - i. by special smoke apparatus (Chloro-Sulphuric Acid) carried in certain ships and craft.
 - ii. by smoke-boats carried by ships and craft.
 - iii. by aircraft, some dropping phosphorus smoke bombs and others laying smoke curtains with S.C.L.
 - iv. by 2 in. and 3 in. mortars.
- c. It is considered that attention should be drawn to the following points which indicate the periods during which smoke will probably be especially required and to certain qualifications which should be borne in mind.
 - i. If the assault is carried out in daylight it is virtually certain that smoke will be required to cover the landing craft during the final stages of the approach. Similarly, if ships or craft are required to lie comparatively close to the shore during daylight hours, then they will require smoke to cover them from shore batteries and from air attack. Such screens may have to persist throughout the daylight hours. A long period of this kind entails the carriage and employment of very large quantities of smoke equipment which may require special provision.
 - ii. The withdrawal from a combined operation especially if the enemy is in close contact and can still bring fire to bear from fixed or mobile batteries, is bound to be a difficult undertaking and constitutes a phase of the operation during which smoke will without doubt play a big part. Experience at Dieppe more than proved its value at a critical time of this sort.
 - iii. The smoke laid to cover craft as they approach the landing places must follow and not precede action by fighter aircraft against these landing places, and the preliminary Naval bombardment.

Something approaching and something too far from the objective at least half a mile, a supporting plan. Such conditions probably do not allow complete mobility of the force. Therefore, all the more importance is placed upon the assault, especially in order to shorten the plan, and these may indicate the need for some modification in the original plan.

The following would be the best course to take, unless a very specific requirement is present, and more than this has been established by the circumstances, or the force is to be held in reserve, or the assault is to be delayed, or the objective is to be captured.

The temporary objective should be selected on the following basis:

(a) If possible, it should be a point which can be reached in a short time, and which is not too far from the objective.

(b) It should be a point which can be reached in a short time, and which is not too far from the objective.

(c) The objective should be a point which can be reached in a short time, and which is not too far from the objective.

(d) The objective should be a point which can be reached in a short time, and which is not too far from the objective.

(e) The main plan should be a plan which is to be kept in reserve, but which is to be used if the assault fails, or if the assault is successful, or if the assault is to be delayed, or if the assault is to be modified.

(f) Steps are now being taken to shorten the time between the start of the assault to reduce the time taken to reach the objective.

(g) Force Commanders will be given frequent operational reports throughout the operation and a metacard file should be attached to their staff.

(h) The Pieppi operations showed the necessity for a directed assessment during the planning stage of major operations. If the press of higher than normal operations and there is evidence to show that a greater quantity (particularly of smoke grenades) should have been carried.

375 PROVISION OF SOME FORM OF LIGHT ARTILLERY

- (a) Once an assault has got across the leading plan, and is making progress inland, one or two main and urgent requirements, who be adequate supporting fire so that no position should not be lost and so that strongly defended areas can be assaulted without delay.
- (b) It is considered that such support can only be provided rapidly by self-propelled artillery and by weapons which can be mounted after the time which each unit will have been laid and proper clearance made, which will still be uncompleted. In such conditions equipment which is in any way cumbersome will not fulfil the requirements.
- (c) In these circumstances it is suggested that the adoption of 82 mm mortars and 100 mm mortars to assaulting units should be considered.

DE GAULLE AND THE COMMUNISTSSUMMARY

National's invasion of Russia reconstituted the relationship between French Communists and General de Gaulle. The former now began to make overtures to the man whom they had recently disdained as a tool of British plottocracy, while he, in turn, reciprocated their attention. The new friendship was sealed by Russia's extensive recognition of the fighting French in September 1942. Indeed, the Communists have been exercising so much influence over de Gaulle and his adherents that the whole movement threatens to become simply an auxiliary of Russian grand strategy.

French Communists have staged an impressive recovery. Once almost completely discredited because of their "fifth column" activities during the war and their collaborationist leanings after the defeat, they now play the leading role in the underground movement within France. The courage and daring of their acts, their persecution by the Nazis and by Vichy, their intimate association with the Russians and with veterans of the French Army's Intelligence Service, and especially, their long and invaluable experience in organizing and running the machinery of a secret organization — all these factors account for their preeminence.

DE GAULLE AND THE COMMUNISTS

The relations between French Communists and General de Gaulle have reflected the development of Russian foreign policy and faithfully followed the "party line". After the conclusion of the Russo-German pact in August 1939 French Communists abandoned their pro-Soviet anti-Fascist policy. They acted as a "fifth column" during the war and, after the defeat of France, still held the imperialistic democracies responsible for the war. Two of their leaders, Thorez and Dauless, signed a manifesto (September 1940) demanding the trial of the guilty statesmen, while de Gaulle and his adherents in London were denounced as agents of the City and tools of British plutocracy.

The German invasion of Russia obliged French Communists to revise their program. By August 1941 they were trying to attract every sort of French patriot to a new "popular front". In September or October 1941, Matiski, the Russian ambassador in London, vainly attempted to secure the admission of two leading Communists, Thorez and Marty, to the de Gaulle Committee.

However, since General de Gaulle was anxious to increase his following and to offset the failure of the United States to recognize him politically, he resumed negotiations with the Communists in London and in March 1942, sent two envoys to Russia, Roger Garaud and General Petiot. On 15 May

1942, the Central Committee of the French Communist Party published a declaration upholding de Gaulle. Party members began to support him openly. De Gaulle's envoys in Russia evidently concluded a military agreement, for in September it was announced that Fighting French aviators of the ~~International~~ escadrille were being sent to the USSR. On 28 September, the French National Committee and the Russian Government issued a joint communique in London announcing Russian recognition of de Gaulle's committee as the only body qualified to represent French interests and to organize French participation in the war. Three weeks later, de Gaulle called for armed resistance in France, a premature appeal which had little effect and was probably inspired by Garreau who had just returned from Russia. The alliance of the Communists and the followers of de Gaulle was underscored by the arrival in London (January 1943) of Fernand Grenier, at one time a Communist Deputy and the secretary of the "Amis de l'URSS."

In return for recognition by a major power, de Gaulle has apparently subordinated himself sufficiently to the Kremlin to become a trump card in Moscow's political game. This has already become evident in North Africa; similar signs are appearing in France, especially with respect to internal resistance.

The new direction taken by the "party line" in the summer of 1941 presented French Communists with considerable difficulties. They not only found communications with Moscow next to impossible but also ran the risk of alienating their usual followers by executing just another battlefield. However, they were a firmly disseminated part of their policy of sabotage and destruction during the war. Today the truth will be known about the extensive destruction caused by Communist workers and the number of Communist agents arrested in armaments, on the railways, and in defense plants. Near the front like the French headquarters of the Communists served the enemy. In Alsace and Lorraine they were centers of a movement for autonomy, so called, which really aimed at separation to the profit of Hitler. Finally, after the fall of France, many French Communists became outright collaborationists.

Consequently, Communism was for a time synonymous with treason. It was repudiated by party members and "fellow-travelers" and fell into disrepute in democratic circles. Nevertheless, since the outbreak of the Russo-German War, there has been a strong reaction in the opposite direction.

This development may be accounted for in part by three reasons of a rather sentimental nature. (1) The Germans and the Vichy Government have restored much of the old popularity of the Communists by attributing all the acts of violence committed by unscrupulous patriots to Jews and Communists and by shooting a disproportionately large number of Communist hostages. (2) Communists everywhere have capitalised on the admiration and hope aroused among conquered peoples by the heroic struggle of the Russian army. (3) Communist workers, better trained and better situated as they are for the work of internal resistance, have rehabilitated their party by their acts of courage and daring.

Communists, moreover, have enjoyed an enormous tactical advantage. They have been virtually the only group in France to receive from already the resources making clandestine activity possible and to provide a system of communications, camouflaged local leaders, publishing presses, and all the rest of the paraphernalia of an illegal organization. In the view of this apparatus they are masters; the democrats, liberals and socialists are mere apprentices. Although much of this illegal apparatus was destroyed by the police in 1939-40, the experience, the methods and, to some extent, the men have remained.

Therefore, the Communists soon captured the leadership of the French underground movement from the inexperienced supporters of de Gaulle. Their preponderance has been favored by the formation of three groups of secret resistance -- "Liberation", "Combat", and "Franco-Tireur", a circumstance permitting them to use their special talents to the full.

The liaison between de Gaulle and the Communists has been strengthened by the soldiers and agents of the Intelligence Service of the French Army (Second and Fifth Divisions), many of whom once maintained close relations with the Russian Secret Service. Some of them rallied to de Gaulle and aided in the organization of the underground. Several of them who were once members of the secret and reactionary "Cagoulards" are now prominent at London and at Vichy, among them Commandant Passy, the chief of de Gaulle's Intelligence Service. The "Combat" group was founded by an officer of the Second Bureau who was protected by Puchon, Petain's Minister of the Interior.

Russian influence upon de Gaulle has come also from the governments in exile and from the refugees, many of them "Yellow-trowsers", particularly among the Czechoslovaks. In the USA and in Canada "Yellow-

"travellers" dominate the Fighting French party line, the campaign directed against the condemned Fascist foreign policy of Chamberlain.

The vagaries of the "party line" have caused notable changes in the personnel of French Commissars. At present the roster is approximately as follows:

Refugees in Russia since the start of the war: Bourges Thorez, Andre Marty, Jacques Duclos (all Deputies).

Shot as hostages: Pierre Sémard, Gabriel Péri, Lucien Longpré.

Members of a collaborationist party (Dutet's Jeannette National Front or Doriot's Parti Populaire Français): the two Communist Senators, Marcel Cachin (managing director of L'Humanité) and Clémence (mayor of Belley); Rocard (secretary of the CGT); Durand (editor-in-chief of L'Humanité); and many deputies and mayors -- Goujon, Pignier, Dumas, Irat, Peral, Tassart, Bourgeton, Lebrun, Yvobard, Jardin, Castellas, Routhier, Beckand, Gistou, Clément and Serge --, the last three of whom have been assassinated, undoubtedly by their co-conspirators.

In May 1941, several prominent Communists interned in concentration camp, headed by René-Jean (deputy from Lot-et-Garonne) and Henri Bourassa (secretary of the Fédération de la France), vainly requested of Admiral Darlan that they be allowed to participate in the "National revolution".

Twenty-seven deputies interned in Algeria have recently been freed: Dorlier, Billoux, Fernand Berte, Geste, Gradient, Hammoudi, Pajon, Gaou, Greco, Lavige, Martel, Hammam, Prochay, Prot, Valdaine.

Rochet, Toussaint, Berot, Martelain, Baudot, Gouraudy, Chauvelin, Delteil, Dr. Levy, Lescure, Louis Mial, Bouquet, and Peltier.

Thus, the fate of almost every leading French Communist is known.

It is worth noting that Berot and Delteil, leaders of the French Communist International, and Paul Merlet and Chauvelin, directors of the Ministry of Information and Propaganda in the Vichy Government, are communists who have maintained relations with many of their old associates. Had it not been for Hitler's invasion of Russia most of the French Communists would have joined the ranks of the collaborationists.

The extent of Communist political influence in the underground was shown at the time of the Riom trial. With the exception of the Socialist Popular, the clandestine press almost ignored it. Communists wished to check the growing popularity of Leon Blum, a tendency confirmed by the attacks of the Moscow radio on Blum and Leon Jouhaux.

French Socialists and democrats at London at first objected to collaborating too closely with the Communists. The fact that recent arrivals in London have adopted a different attitude shows the central which de Gaulle's supporters exercise over the secret system of liaison and transport. Are we not prepared to approve de Gaulle's policies in France? Similarly, there is no room in the underground press for the expression of divergent ideas. We know nothing, for instance, of the underground's true opinion of the入党 principle advanced by the Socialist "Fellow-traveller", Pierre Lysaclette, and endorsed as

Passed by the "Aren Journe" group of Radicals.

Communists being what they are, it is difficult to collaborate with them without sacrificing the rest to the cause. Since de Gaulle and his followers are inexperienced, their services threaten to become simply a supplementary tool in the expert hands of French military and diplomatic strategists. Yet this danger could still be easily averted.

From our New York Office we have received the following information which it is claimed came through General Menthourard. The Reporting Board has not disseminated this to anyone and will not do so unless you feel that additional distribution should be made:

"The telegram from Marshal Petain which Darlan received between the time when he gave the order to cease fire and the occupation of Vichy by the Germans contained the following three points (paraphrased, as he had not an exact copy):

- "(1) My affectionate remembrances,
- "(2) I leave you free to act as you deem best in the interest of France,
- "(3) Anything I may say from now on is valueless. I am about to become a prisoner."

Dear Bill:

I know that you are busy and on the go most of the time.

I want to congratulate you on the outstanding job you are doing although due to the nature of it we mere civilians know little or nothing about it. They certainly have kept you and your department out of the public eye insofar as any real information is concerned.

I was forced to fight this war by proxy. I have a 24-year old boy who has just finished his third year in the Marine Corps. He was commissioned a 2nd Lieutenant on March 1st and will finish his Officer's Training at Quantico on May 24th, when I suppose he will be shipped West to one of the more active spots.

While I understand that it is not generally known who the men are working under you, it has come to my attention that you have a Naval Lieutenant (e.g.), Nelson Deranian, under you in some capacity. He is a lawyer here in Indianapolis and is very well thought of. I have a high regard for him and know him to be a man in whom you can put implicit trust and who is the type of fellow who is absolutely fearless and knows how to use his head under all circumstances.

I am taking the liberty of giving you this information, entirely unsolicited by him, as I thought it might be of some aid to you.

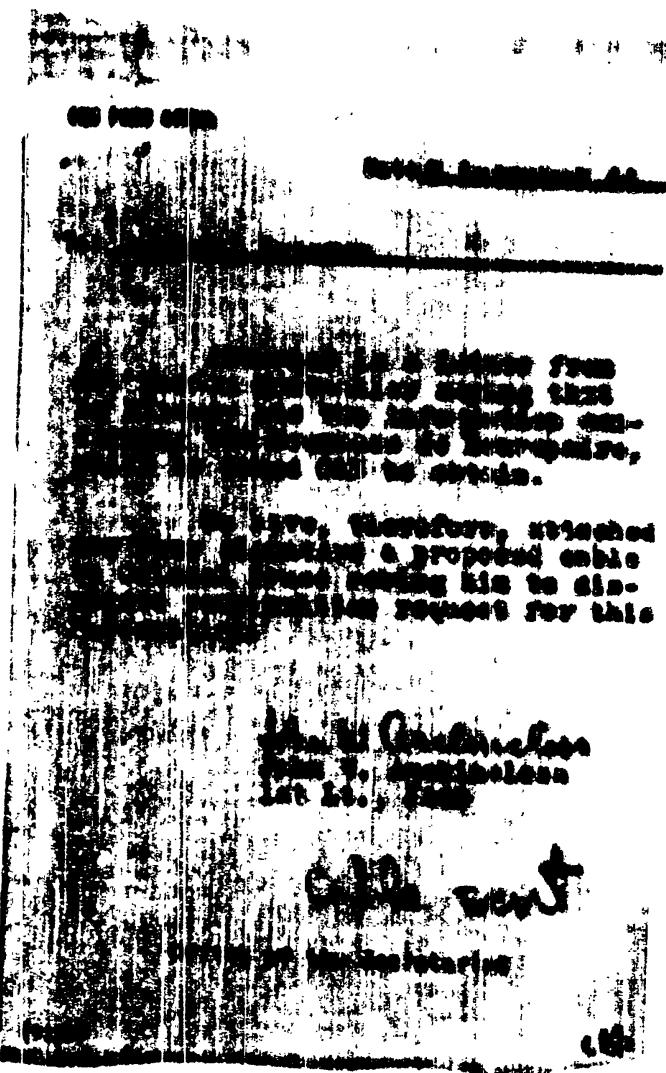

If anything should arise in which I could be of service to you, please do not hesitate to call on me.

With kindest regards and every wish for your continued good luck (although I must say you have strained it at times), I am

Dear Dunn:

I should like to call your attention to the following statement of Lt. General Dean, General Staff Corps, which he made to me yesterday. Lt. General Dean said that he had been asked by Col. Alexis de Sakhnoffsky (Alexis Sakhanovsky) to be chosen, we understand, to head the American liaison section for Germany.

"Lt. Col. Alexis Sakhanovsky, a member of the General Staff Corps, just arrived in Germany from Moscow yesterday. He was Intelligence Officer to General Dean. Colonel Sakhanovsky says that he has prepared at the request of General Dean a detailed report on his impressions of the Soviet Union which is being sent through Major George P. Hopkins. From our conversation with Col. Sakhanovsky we feel strongly that any report of his would be distorted, unbalanced and unreliable.

"Col. Sakhanovsky was born in Russia before the revolution in a very wealthy family. In addition he was known as an industrial designer and has built many motor cars and boats for "Esquire" magazine, United States of Count Alexis de Sakhanovsky. He is visibly anti-Soviet.

"We are not sure exactly what Col. Sakhanovsky's standing is or how much weight may be given to his opinions in Washington (he himself says that General Dean did not ask the War Department asking that no more than his business be sent to his mission), but we feel that potentially he could do harm to our relations with our ally."

We have discussed this matter orally with Mr. Bohlen.

I am sending you herewith a memorandum prepared by the USSR Division. It appears to me that the appointment of Lt. Colonel Sakhnoffsky as Army Air Forces Russian Liaison Officer for Germany might have undesirable consequences and it might be wise for you to call the attention of the appropriate authorities to the dangers involved.

MEMORANDUM

To: Dr. William L. Langer

Via: G. T. Robinson

From: J. A. Morrison

Subject: Lt. Col. A. V. de Sakhnoffsky
(Alexis de Sakhanovsky)

We have just learned from Major Hall (RDA, London) that subject has been designated head of the Army Air Forces Russian liaison section for Germany.

Two months ago we received the following information regarding subject from our two majors in Iran:

"Lt. Col. Alexis Sakhanovsky, U. S. Army Air Corps, just arrived in Teheran from Moscow where he says he was Intelligence Officer to General Dean. Colonel Sakhanovsky says that he has prepared at the request of General Dean a detailed report on his impressions of the Soviet Union which is being sent through Bohlen for Harry Hopkins. From our conversation with Col. Sakhanovsky we feel strongly that any report of his would be distorted, unbalanced and unreliable.

"Col. Sakhanovsky was born in Russia before the revolution in a very wealthy family. In America he was known as an industrial designer and did drawings of snappy motor cars and boats for "Esquire" magazine under the name of Count Alexis de Sakhanovsky. He is violently anti-Soviet.

"We are not sure exactly what Col. Sakhanovsky's standing is or how much weight may be given to his opinions in Washington (he himself says that General Dean has cabled the War Department asking that no more White Russians be sent to his Mission), but we feel that potentially he could do ~~no~~ harm to our relations with our ally."

"We urge that you look into the status of Col. Sakhnovsky's report and take any steps that seem appropriate".

While subject's name is spelled differently in the London report, there is no doubt that he is the same person, since both reports refer to his motor car designs for ~~Esquire~~ magazine.

We have not seen the detailed report subject is reported to have sent to Harry Hopkins. However, on 7 October Dr. Robinson called Mr. Bohlen's attention to the information regarding him we had received from Tehran.

If the views of our two majors are correct, the designation of Lt. Col. Sakhnoffsky as head of an AAP Russian liaison section for Germany would appear to be highly unfortunate.

Should not this development be called to General Donovan's attention?

Incidentally, our London report states that subject is preparing a handbook for the use of his section and has promised to give us a copy.

You were very kind to send us a telegram a long time ago. I hope you got my answer - since then I haven't heard anything either from you or other friends or even my Father.

When we escaped from Fascist Italy I thought we were going to stop in this country ten days or so. It is now ten months and we are still here, stuck.

No possibility of going to one for the moment. Once in Rome nothing to do even there.. Can't you get me something to do to help to win this war which is not war by all means. I can speak English, French, and Italian. I am a Veteran but I can still run, ride and drive like a young man. I am rotting away here in idleness and with very little money. Dear Bill:

Thank you very much for your note. I appreciate your writing me. I am glad you enjoyed your service, and you ought to be back at your work feeling an intense satisfaction with what you have done in the war. It meant a real contribution.

It ought to be gratifying also for you to know that the MO work is gaining new recognition in the Pacific. A lot of the frontier that you helped break is now being recognized.

My dear General:-

It seems rather strange for me to be back in civilian clothes after over three years in the Army including my eighteen months with Colonel Glavin in North Africa and Italy. However, I have a full time job here.

I wish to go on record in saying how much I enjoyed serving under Colonel Glavin overseas and that I feel great satisfaction in the work accomplished during my tour of duty with O.S.S.

It was a pleasure meeting you in Algiers and Italy. Even though I am no longer connected with O.S.S. I naturally have an interest, as publisher of The Sun, in its work.

If at any time you are in New York and find a free hour I would appreciate getting together with you for lunch or any other time at your convenience.

Subject: DESPAZ, Michel Jean Batiste

1. This man employed by CGS in North Africa under the name of Michel Jean Batiste Despax is an austrian Jew whose real name is Jacob Fischer. His alias given in CGS is "Pink Eye" as he has one light brown and one blue eye. He speaks several languages and at times has claimed that he is a Pole. Colonel GRODZINSKI of the Polish Army now in North Africa states that early in 1940 Despax applied to him for enlistment in the Polish Legion then being formed in Paris, but as he had no proof of Polish citizenship or identification papers of any kind except an Austrian passport, his application was denied. His wife was the widow of an Austrian banker who died sometime before Despax married her, and she is reputed to have been rather wealthy at one time.

2. Despax claims that he served in the French Foreign Legion as a Belgian and that he worked for the Deuxieme Bureau in Paris, where he became acquainted with M. Rigaud and Mr. Robert Murphy. He states that in recognition of the valuable work done for the Deuxieme Bureau he was given a Vichy passport and sent to Algiers where, through Rigaud, he again established contact with Mr. Murphy. Through Murphy he met Colonel Eddy of CGS, who passed him along to Lt. Col. King in Casablanca with favorable recommendations. King employed him and he has remained in the service of CGS in Morocco continuously since that date.

3. Despax is probably about 50 years old, short and rather stocky with a bald pate, partly covered by long sandy grey side hair brushed over the top of his head. He has a ruddy complexion and a clean-shaven face, the most striking feature of which is his eyes of different colors. He always manages to dress well and, having traveled about Europe a great deal, he meets people well, contriving to create the impression that he is a man of the world and always "in the know". Much of the time this is probably correct because he has the faculty of finding out everything that is going on, sometimes before it happens. He is quiet, polite and intelligent, but his politeness is obsequious and his intelligence is of the fox terrorist type. With an air of engaging frankness he can switch from one position to another or from one side of a story to another without a second's stop in his steady flow of plausible words and without batting an eye. He probably has no consciousness of truth as a virtue. He is unstable, rapacious and almost certainly a physical coward.

4. Because of his natural prying nature, his instinct for intrigue and his ability to ingratiate himself into most any situation, he was able to render valuable services to OSS in Morocco, and King learned to trust and rely heavily upon him. But because he is rapacious and completely unscrupulous he did not hesitate to use his position with OSS to further his personal ends in every way possible. While this made him a heavy liability to carry, his greatest danger to OSS lay in his position with respect to the French Securite Militaire.

5. After the debarkation of American troops, the pro-allied groups in North Africa, while remaining loyal to the Allied cause so far as winning the war is concerned, split up into national allegiances in all other matters. This was particularly true as to police and intelligence activities, and the British, French and Americans quickly found themselves in separate camps. It was then that Despax's position became questionable if not dangerous to OSS. He is an enemy alien with no claim to protection by the French after the Americans cease to employ him except a Vichy passport which will be valueless unless backed by the good will of the French police. The methods employed by the Securite Militaire in cases of this kind are well known, and it is not to be believed that they have not long since forced him into the role of a double agent. Whether or not Despax wanted to serve the S.M. is beside the point, although I believe that it is quite in his character to enjoy the part, especially if he believed that by playing it he could insure for himself some measure of security for the future. It is well known that everyone who helped the Americans, particularly in policy or intelligence work, sooner or later found themselves in serious difficulties with the French authorities. Despax alone has escaped and is freely received at the Residency at Rabat and in police circles throughout the country. His position outside OSS does not permit attributing this fact to anything except his usefulness to the French. Two former policy chiefs, who at the cost of their official positions offered their complete loyalty to the American cause, recently informed us that Despax was in the service of the De Gaulle Militaires and was a dangerous man for OSS to employ. They stated that during the summer of 1943 they searched his rooms and found, in addition to quantities of American canned goods, a small steel safe belonging to the De Gaulle Militaires. Also hidden behind the photograph of her father in a silver frame was an Austrian passport with visas by Spain, France and Germany for a trip that Mrs. Despax had planned for November 1942. These statements have not been reported to King, partly because they were not supported by proofs, but particularly because the inferences to be drawn from Despax's general situation are more important and have been clearly evident for nearly a year.

6. Regardless of the foregoing, this man has been a trusted employee of OSS in Casablanca since before the debarkation. At times he has had access to the most secret files and cables, and it is doubtful if there is any information on any subject handled through this office that he has not been able to learn about.

7. Despax has been accused of many things, from placing his own informers at OSS expense in the office of prominent American officials in Casablanca for the benefit of the French, to bribing a mess sergeant to sell him American rations in bulk at the back door of a mess hall. He is alleged to have posed as a representative of the American Consulate in Casablanca and as a confidante of General Donovan, with whom he was in personal correspondence. Documentary proof of his attempt to steal a valuable automobile belonging to OSS has been obtained and submitted to OSS Headquarters in Algiers. Whether the various charges against this man, other than the attempted theft of the automobile, are true is of less importance than the fact that a non-American citizen, carrying a Vichy passport and occupying a position in which he could not resist French police pressure if applied, has been admitted to and retained in a confidential position in an OSS office. It has never been suggested that Despax was insecure so far as the enemy is concerned, and so long as he is physically safe in Allied territory that question will not be important. It is my personal belief, however, that if he were captured by the enemy and his personal safety were at stake, he would divulge all that he knows and work as cheerfully for the Axis as he has for the Americans.

8. Most of the foregoing may have been known to King or the possibility of its being true may have been fully considered by him. He may have concluded that the good work that Despax was doing for OSS outweighed the danger.

of having confidential information reported to the French and thus felt justified in his own use of the man. In order to separate him from his previous contacts and as far as possible from the Security Unit, Despex is now being sent to Italy. It is understood that this is a preliminary step leading towards the termination of his employment as soon as a good opportunity can be found; but in the meantime the O.S.C. personnel in Italy should be warned that he is to be treated as a sub-agent and given no confidential information of any kind.

ALL INFORMATION CONTAINED HEREIN IS UNCLASSIFIED

Subject: 1977 DAFN Index, No. 11046, Question.

To : Colonel J. Edward Glavin, Chief OSS Mission, Algiers.

1. In November 1942 when the Axis occupying agents and authorities ~~authorities~~ fled French Morocco, the Administrative Police of Casablanca took possession of a 1939 DAFN four-door sedan No. 11046 which had belonged to the National Maritime Commission. This car was stored in Casablanca for a few days and on or about November 20, 1942 was turned over by Major Beyer, the ~~police~~ who was Chief of the Administrative Police, to Mr. Michael Baskin, an employee of the Casablanca office of OSS. Beyer states that the car was demanded of him by Deppen as a prize de guerre "for the use of General Gaspard in Algiers" while Deppen claims that the car was offered to him by Beyer "for the use of the Americans". From what I know of the two men, I am inclined to accept Beyer's statement as being more likely and probably the truth. At any rate Deppen took possession of the car on about the date mentioned in the presence of one of Beyer's inspectors of police and Captain Andre Bourguignon of the French Army assigned to the C.I.C. 9th Army. Deppen parked the car in a public garage frequently used by OSS and owned by Captain Bourguignon, but one day later he moved the car to a nearby private garage which he had personally rented. Had it not been that one of the inspectors of the Administrative Police happened to be passing and saw Deppen lock the car in his private garage, it seems more than likely that it would never have been seen again by a representative of OSS.
2. Assuming that the car was to become the property of OSS as a prize de guerre, Beyer demanded from Deppen a receipt for it signed by someone in authority in OSS. Deppen agreed to get such a receipt for him but it was not until five months later that he gave Beyer a receipt dated April 14, 1943 signed by Mr. (now Lt. Col.) Ruchon, who at that time was executive officer in OSS Headquarters at Algiers. Photographic copies of the receipt and the covering letter to Beyer are attached as exhibits. It will be noted that the covering letter omits all identifying details and appears to have been signed by Ruchon but that the receipt which includes the car and registration numbers and states that it has been requisitioned by the Experimental Detachment, G-2, AFHQ, Algiers, was obviously signed with an imitation of Ruchon's signature by some other person. These facts suggest that probably Ruchon was not correctly informed as to what car was involved when he signed the letter of transmittal.
3. On September 14, 1943, having got the car into his private possession, Deppen insured it in his own name with a local French insurance agency. By paying him the unearned portion of the premium, I covered ten percent of the policy to me for the account of OSS, taking his receipt for the premium. The additional policy issued in the name of Deppen, bearing the transferred ~~unearned~~ ~~unearned~~ premium with a receipt signed by Deppen for the unearned premium paid to him are attached as exhibits.
4. Sometime in 1943, Deppen purchased at his own expense at a claimed cost of Frs. 5000, four civilian type tires which he mounted on the car. I and so provided these lines from his at the time I took possession of the car and he would not call them for me, preferring to be interviewed by the Agent in Charge. I asked that "if and when possible" GDI would supply him with these documents. You have no idea of such protocol. This was refused to writing and signed in agreement by Deppen and is included as another exhibit.

5. In December 1943 Deppen received in his car keys from the French authorities an authorization for circulation for the car, but as he had no French license (license) showing valid ownership, he claimed that he got the circulation permit for another car and attached it to the windshield of the M-17. This is also exhibited as an exhibit. During his tour during the Invasion, he obtained and inserted on his car license plates which he claimed belonged to a French citizen who had died. He also had a slip cover under the dash and stated that at his request was taken off and returned to him.

6. Upon my arrival in Casablanca, I began looking about for a car for my own use and was told about the M-17 by one of my old contacts who also sold weapons in the Administrative Police could give me the facts regarding M-17. Major, in the meantime had lost his post as chief of the organization but he readily gave me all the information he had about the car and showed me the license and receipts he had received for it. He did not know what circumstances had been made of the car but through inquiries among his old associates, he learned where and by whom the car was stored from the Inspector who had seen Deppen look it up. It was established that the car was still there and when confronted with the information I had about his possession of it, Deppen admitted the facts as reported herein and turned the car over to me. He explained that he had been instructed by someone in Algiers to keep the car in good shape to be used by General Devers or General King when either of them came to Casablanca. However, he could not certain why he had turned it in his own name; why he had paid for the insurance and taxes out of his own pocket; why he had never registered the car in the name of GDI as a voiture de guerre; and especially why he had never told I.A.S.A. King anything about the car. Undoubtedly, Colonel King had no knowledge of the existence of the car until I told him about it and gave him copies of the French letter and receipt.

7. At Major's urgent request the name of the police Inspector who went with me to the garage where the car was stored, was withheld from Colonel King and Deppen to prevent reprisals by Deppen who, it is believed by local police authorities, has on several occasions been able to cause trouble for French employees who have helped Americans.

by Deppen

8. Many reports of shady dealings have been received from time to time but, so far as I know, this is the first case where absolute proof of his crooked intentions has been obtained. Since these facts have been known, he has been nervous in my presence and twice has asked me what would be the probable effect of his signed admissions of culpability. I have informed him that a full report of the case would be made, but that I did not believe that this case alone would adversely affect the disposition that, in any event, would be made of him in the development of OAS affairs in North Africa.

13. I have no information which would have been obtained by this method or otherwise which would indicate any of the parties concerned would have approached me or any other individual as a vehicle for carrying out any type of plot or scheme. In the present instance it is noted that the information obtained is to be passed on to the proper authorities and the name of the source will be omitted.

14. I have established ownership of the car for the purpose of the car and obtained a New York state plates and license plates for it. To be licensed for the State, I have retained until 09/20/67 a copy of the insurance policy of the car and a copy of the title for identification. Likewise I have obtained and maintained the car from the General Service in Cleveland. I have also obtained permission to drive the car and authority to drive anywhere and will keep it from the U.S.A. I shall continue to use this car as long as I am in North Africa and will return the car with all papers to the Office of OAS, Algiers when I leave.

Dear Mr. Lanza:

Since General Donovan is out of the city, I have for reply your letter of 7 April. I have checked and find that no investigation concerning you is in progress. TO : Mr. Cheston
FROM : J. J. Monigan, Jr.
SUBJECT:

DATE: 13 April 1945

I have discussed the matter concerning which the attached correspondence was written with Col. Pfaff, Mr. van Beuren, and Lt. Tarca.

Apparently the investigation about which Mr. di Trabia's letter was written was the result of the decision of General Donovan. Mr. di Trabia worked for X-2 in Italy and got into some difficulty with Vincent Scamparino's group. It was also learned from Italian SI that he was engaged in New York in raising money for the Italian Action Party. Col. Pfaff, before returning him to Italy, wanted to verify the basic facts concerning di Trabia's activity, and hence with General Donovan's approval directed Mr. van Beuren to accomplish the necessary investigation.

The investigation did disclose Mr. di Trabia's activity in that regard and that, together with the completion of the work for which he was suited, caused X-2 not to return him to Italy.

No investigation is currently being made, and the recital of that fact in the letter for your approval is correct. The remainder of the letter can be justified on the theory that it is in fact a follow-up investigation.

Major General William J. Donovan
Director of the Office of Strategic Services
Washington, D.C.

Dear General Donovan:

A number of my friends have been approached lately, and even today, by agents of the Office of Strategic Services. They were asked questions regarding my activities and my political opinions. Some of the questions, such as whether I am a "dangerous red" or whether I am raising money for the Italian Action Party, are apt to be damaging to my reputation besides bringing the good name of O.S.S. in view of my connection for two years with this office, whose confidence I enjoyed during this period.

I would, in any case, appear somewhat late to start an investigation of this sort at the present time, since, as you know, termination of my contract with this office was already decided upon.

I should, therefore, appreciate it very much indeed, if you were kind enough to issue orders to the investigating department, which, I presume, it will not be difficult to identify, to stop this kind of unpleasantness. My past services, for which I hold your kind letter of appreciation and gratitude, as you are good enough to word it, would, it seems, entitle me to that much consideration.

With my kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

F. C. Ansel di Trabia

I.

The identification of Darlan with our operations in North Africa presents difficulties which cannot be ignored. These difficulties are not changed, whether Darlan foisted himself upon us or was forced upon us by someone else, or whether he made a deal with him on our own.

II.

By whatever means we were placed in this position, we have before us the very practical problem of eliminating the political leadership of Darlan with its attendant consequences to the French people and to our own successful prosecution of the war. Our great influence with the people of Europe has been due not only to our strength but to our straight dealing. It is apparent that the continuance of the present situation will weaken our traditional position. We cannot wait too long to find a solution.

III.

While it is essential to prevent the concentration of power in Darlan, it may be impossible for us at this time to repudiate him--at least until Tunisia has been settled. But it is possible to reassure that part of France which has been ~~French~~ collaboration and which is now so shocked and stunned as to be incapable of action.

IV.

It has been suggested that ~~the~~ ^{of France} ~~restitution~~ of French should be brought out by us and set up in North Africa. I think that has its difficulties--first, it would mean that we were setting up a puppet government, and second, it would be only another refugee government. We cannot be placed in the position of selecting either an individual or a group to act for the people of France. There must be some appeal to us by those who are making the basic fight.

V.

I therefore suggest the following:

That we stimulate the setting up in Occupied France of a national committee or a coalition government--a coalition of those various elements that have combined together to form patriot armies and to carry on underground the work of resistance to the invader

Such action would constitute a basis for a democratic form of government and of leadership later on. Such a government would have its strength by reason of its position within the country and it could rely ^{for communication and} on us ~~for~~ support. Once set up, that government could issue its manifesto, either anonymously or ⁱⁿ by the name, of its

Assent
to its authority over North Africa and asking the United States to accept the trusteeship of that territory until France could be freed to act for itself.

It seems to me that so constituted, it would be an answer to the legitimacy of succession argument of Berian and the French army, that sanction would be given to our control in North Africa and we would be reestablished on an honest relationship with the French people.

INTEROFFICE MEMO

TO: Colonel Donovan

FROM: Major Bruce

SUBJECT:

The following information regarding the Dakar situation, which has just been obtained from the State Department, may be of interest to you.

The first telegram has just come through from Flexer, U.S. Consul, who has, up to now, been interned. He was released on November 23 and permitted to re-open the Consulate; however, he has not actually done so but is awaiting instructions from the Department. The only thing of interest which he has to say in his telegram is that Boisson has impressed everyone with the announcement that there would be no foreign occupation of French West Africa. The telegram was sent "en clair" since Flexer destroyed his codes when relations were severed.

Of more significance is the fact that three groups of U.S. Army officers, totalling about ten men and under Colonel Merrick, are leaving at once for Dakar in order to do topographic work on airfields in French West Africa. I assume this means that it is planned to use such fields for the movement of aircraft from our West African bases to the North African Front.

Colonel Merrick is carrying fresh State Department codes to Flexer.

In 1937 or 1938, Djangaroff was asked by Russell Fish to "handle a transaction involving the purchase of oil" that the latter had made through Trujillo, then in Santa Domingo. The quantity of oil is not known, but Fish's remuneration was $100,000, and that promised Djangaroff between $60,000 and $70,000. (Djangaroff says that he did not receive his share, but Source believes that it was paid to him in Santa Domingo.) At about this time, Djangaroff "made several trips to Venezuela, probably in connection with Fish's business", and Fish himself went to Europe. Upon Djangaroff's return to New York, Fish enabled him to arrange for a safe disposition of his $100,000, however Djangaroff replied that the affair was "too hot to touch" and declined to have any further part in it. Fish then made other arrangements for the disposition of his money, which, it is thought was in cash and not in cheque form.

Source disclaimed knowledge of further details, except that the oil was "for an un-named foreign country".

Re: GEORGE DJAMGAROFF

The above-mentioned George DJAMGAROFF, who claims to be a Russian, is an adventurer who has been "in and out of the money" at various periods in his life, and has often been penniless. He was publicity man for Ganna WALSKA and later sales representative for "GANNA WALSKA FURNITURE." His latest large position was with General TRUJILLO of Santo Domingo, from whom he received $50,000 per year for publicity purposes. He was married to and divorced from the widow of the late Marcus DALY, whom he would now like to re-marry for her money, which he says amounts to $20,000,000. It is reported that she has refused him.

He attempted to persuade the Mexican Ambassador to appoint him as public relations counsel.

It is said that DJAMGAROFF is persona non grata with the State Department, and particularly with Sumner MEMLIES. DJAMGAROFF produces an old letter from Cordell HULL in support of his claim that his persona grata, but this does not illustrate the general attitude of the State Department with regard to him. It is also reported that DJAMGAROFF has had a little trouble with the Department of Justice, and he is said to have been involved in a narcotics "racket" in this country and apprehended on this account. DJAMGAROFF had made many enemies in Washington press circles.

We have been informed that both the Germans and the Japanese have attempted to employ him for intelligence work.

My dear Colonel:

While in Washington the beginning of this week, I saw Mr. Clark, Assistant to the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs and upon his suggestion I saw the Directors of several different sections. At their request I am sending memorandum, copy of which I am enclosing.

With best regards and wishing you a very happy New Year. I am

Mr. William L. Clark,
Assistant to the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Commerce Department Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Clark:

Following our conversation, I pursued your suggestion and called on Mr. H. Marshall who referred me to Mr. Harry V. Francis. Upon the suggestion of Mr. Francis, I am sending a memorandum to Mr. Francis Janssen, copy of which is herewith attached.

We are in the war and we have enemies on the battlefield. If you don't shoot your enemy first, he will shoot you. In the field of propaganda in South America, we have a very powerful enemy in the form of well-trained German and Italian propagandists.

Because their methods and techniques are well-known to me, it is my hope that my knowledge and past experience might be of some value in the present emergency.

Very sincerely yours,

GD'ky

In a democracy like the United States of America, public opinion carries great influence in formulating domestic policy and external relations. This situation of the state has made necessary a new and continuing effort to insure - one of Public Relations Council - that the end objectives generally are the creation of legislative circumstances which will maximize opportunity public opinion favorably toward the desired policies, the direction of efforts toward strengthening favorable legislation, and the polling of informed publics which may have arisen as a result of educational programs, etc., etc. In the accomplishment of these ends, the public relations council will be employing the public - and also elements not commonly utilized.

The methods of accomplishing the desired result through propaganda varies greatly even in different democratic countries. For instance, in pre-war Spain, news space could be purchased at as many stations per line which is, of course, impossible in the United States.

In a totalitarian state, where the press is controlled, the function of the Public Relations Council is taken usually by the Ministry of Propaganda or similar agencies.

In South American countries, the same function - of Public Relations Council or "Propaganda", must be classified into several groups, and methods for accomplishing the desired result varied in each group. For instance, methods used in Colombia cannot be used in the Dominican Republic or Venezuela or vice versa.

DR. George Kanguroff became of frequent visits to Germany, Italy and South American countries in the past seven or eight years, during which he has made extensive studies of propaganda methods and techniques used by Germany and Italy in South America. He particularly well fitted to plan and conduct propaganda campaigns suited to the psychology of the individual countries of Latin America.

D.G. MAST

With Germany, which was then and still is now Germany today, similar, there will be no American connection, or make any really prominent, we cannot use U.S., or any other government because any movement, any organization, whatever the office of the Government of the American citizen to America or for that matter are committed to the use of so-called methods or other methods.

Just as the way can readily only be one by extensive and not definitive contact, as the governments from time also carry on an "affiliation" for Germany. The and being an international organization, financed by individuals, can be used as a medium for an extensive coverage very carefully planned and approved, in such American connection.

Without going into details as to methods since it requires techniques which be used in each country, we will have the following as an example:

In the last few months, General R. Lopez Contreras, former President of Venezuela and Commander-in-Chief of its armed forces and General Rafael H. Trujillo, former President of the Dominican Republic and Commander-in-Chief of its armed forces, visited the United States. Many news stories appeared in the American press and other official notices appeared in the press of their respective countries. Noted notwithstanding the fact that their movements would have been of great interest to the newspapers of their respective countries and their readers, AP, WP, and USA, as customary, carried only the usual small space coverage.

Compare this with the visit of Colonel Batista and General Trujillo in 1959 at which time we acted as Public Relations Counsel. We arranged special events for these two distinguished visitors, planning in detail every event and its execution. We wrote their statements and speeches injecting ideas desired to promote. We directed our efforts toward strengthening favorable impressions and discrediting unfriendly publications. All those planned events which contained news value were publicized in the press throughout the United States by our conservation rating made by the American Committee was not given greater weight in their respective countries.

As a result, no favorable history and friendly relations between these countries and our people. In this case, it was the first visit of these countries and, moreover, the publicity they received for many years prior to this visit, was not favorable.

The New Service was organized in 1934 and registered April 1st, 1935 and operated solely by George Thompson. While its scope was limited, it has earned itself quite a reputation in many South American countries and the news service today.

The New Service carried a Washington Column "A VELLA D'ESPANHA" written by well-known correspondents in Washington (latest news); activities of German Agents in South America (Mr. A); Feature Column "THOMAS Y DOUGLAS KNOWS HIS WAY TO LA HABANA" (Mr. B); Feature Articles (Mr. C); News Wire by wire and air mail (Mr. D); Photographs and notes (Mr. E); etc.

COMMITTEES

George Djamgaroff has for the past fifteen years played an important part in developing public relations, methods and techniques. He has been responsible for many outstanding campaigns of publicity and public relations and has served as public relations counsel to governments and corporations. In 1939 he was appointed public relations counsel to the Inter-parliamentary Conference at Oslo, Norway. Some comments on his work are:

DR. L. S. ROWE, Director-General of the Pan-American Union, Washington, D.C.

"I want to take an early opportunity to congratulate you on the admirable ceremonies held at the New York World's Fair."

HAROLD F. McCORMICK, International Harvester Co., Chicago, Illinois.

"To my mind George Djamgaroff has accomplished splendid work...."

MARTIN W. LITTLETON, Attorney, New York, N.Y.

"I have had many occasions to be associated with Mr. George Djamgaroff, President of the ABC News Service, and have found him intelligent, very trustworthy and exceedingly tactful... He had experience and the unusual quality of forming public opinion.....coupled with a very wide acquaintance. He will be a very desirable associate."

HAMILTON FISH, Congressman, Washington, D.C.

"George Djamgaroff did a fine job of forming public opinion... He is the type of man who puts his shoulder to the wheel and gets results. He is capable and has knowledge and experience in newspaper work in this country, as well as in foreign countries...."

GEORGE GORDON RAPPLER, Attorney, New York N. Y.

"This is a line to congratulate you on the success of the celebration yesterday... you deserve great credit
...It was a pleasure to be associated with you in the matter."

SEÑOR VÍCTORIO ALVAREZ PINA, President of the Administrative Council of the District of Santo Domingo, D. R.

"I wish to express my very hearty congratulations to you for the splendid success of the ceremony which was held in the Court of Peace of the New York World's Fair. This event, in which no detail was omitted in order to make it brilliant and splendid, has been most effective for the purpose desired... and at the same time has served to make the Dominican Republic more important through the publicity received in the newspapers, which have also been under your direction."

WILLIAM GREEN, President American Federation of Labor.

"George Djamaroff secured and organized the support of over two hundred civic, labor and patriotic organizations, combining the Anti-Communist sentiment of the country into one group."

MRS. HENRY P. (JULIA STIMSON) LOOMIS, President, American Cuirroir Funds - New York, N.Y. (Aunt of the Secretary of War.)

"I have known George Djamaroff for many years, and at different times he has helped me in various matters of importance in which I was interested, and where I can say his aid was of the greatest value. I have never found him anything but trustworthy... I feel that his services would be excellent in any cause, and might even be invaluable."

MEMORANDUM

September 17, 1943

RE: GEORGE JAMHAR DJAMGAROFF, with aliases

Djamgaroff is the subject of a Registration Act investigation which was opened at the request of Assistant Secretary of State Adolf A. Berle, Jr., who advised that Djamgaroff was receiving a split on oil shipments from Mexico to Santo Domingo, and was in turn splitting his commission with Congressman Hamilton Fish of New York. At that time, Mr. Berle also advised that Djamgaroff was registered with the State Department as publicity agent for the Dominican Republic. He desired investigation on the theory that Hamilton Fish should also be registered if he was receiving part of the commission of a registered agent.

Considerable investigation has been conducted without substantiating the allegation regarding Djamgaroff and Congressman Hamilton Fish receiving any commissions on oil shipments. It was determined that in 1939 Djamgaroff was receiving $50,000.00 per year for his services as Advertising and Publicity Relations Counsel for the Dominican Republic. This contract is believed to have been canceled.

Djamgaroff was naturalized January 6, 1926. In his declaration of intention to become a citizen, he stated he was born September 17, 1897 in Caucasus, Russia. He claimed to have arrived in the United States August 3, 1920, his last previous residence having been Constantinople, Turkey. The declaration of intention was filed under the name George John Jamhar. The certificate of arrival attached to his petition for naturalization attests that Fahrux Kohareumi Kourken arrived in the United States on August 20, 1920. The "New York American" on October 26, 1932, reported that Djamgaroff admitted he entered the United States under forged papers in 1920, and that this was the only way he could get out of Russia and into the United States.

In checking his credit, it was discovered that several judgments have been filed against him in New York City. In 1939 he was maintaining a moderate four figure bank account at the Guaranty Trust Company in New York City. It was found that he practically exhausted this account between deposits of his salary check which amounted to something over $4,000.00 per month. He occupied a suite, normally renting for $375.00 per month, at the Waldorf-Astoria for fifteen months in 1938 and 1939. He obtained this suite gratis because he arranged to bring the Trujillo party to the hotel during their visit to the New York World's Fair. It was found that he still owes the hotel $200.00 for services rendered during this period.

It has been learned that he hired Royce W. Powell, nephew of Ralph W. Snowden Hill, Assistant Legal Counsel of the State Department, to obtain confidential information from the State Department files concerning transactions between South American countries and the United States. Hill was discharged by the State Department for unethical conduct.

From Djanganoff's secretary it was learned that he is most untrustworthy and treacherous, and carries a pistol for which he has a New York Police Department permit. He seems to be universally known as a bad risk in financial matters, and his manner is so offensive that he makes enemies easily. It is reported that he is particularly disliked by officers of the State Department, including Under Secretary of State Sumner Welles, and has a very hostile attitude toward the latter official.

On August 24, 1930, the New York Herald Tribune carried an article which stated that Djanganoff obtained what amounted to fraudulent affidavits identifying Feodor Ilyevkin, head of Amterg, as a former agent of the Russian Secret Police. Apparently he did this in behalf of Congressman Hamilton Fish, who was head of a Congressional Committee investigating Communist activities.

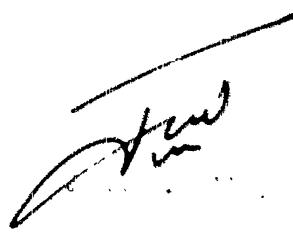

About 1932, the Federated Press described Djanganoff as a Russian Monarchist, plotter and peddler of the now completely discredited Whalen Documents.

He is reported to have married Mrs. Marcus Daly II on July 20, 1932 in London. She is supposed to be worth about $7,000,000.00. She divorced him late in 1935 in Reno, Nevada.

In 1935 it was necessary for the Special Agent in Charge at New York City to contact Djanganoff to warn him about falsely giving the impression that he was connected with the Bureau. At that time in conversations with acquaintances he was making reference to "Edgar Hoover" as an intimate friend of his. When interviewed he stated he had met the Director, which was not true.

L. Davila reported to me yesterday and again reiterated his belief that Antonescu, in his collaboration with the Germans, was completely controlled by them and that, in course of time, he would turn to the Germans in the hope of getting financial assistance of it. L. Davila stressed the statement that there was sabotage and a "score of anti" political groups in the fields. He said he believed it would be best to re-establish contact with Antonescu and that he, upon arrival, would make propositions to him. I indicated that we would have to formulate propositions which might instill confidence in us into Antonescu. L. Davila was strong of the belief that assurances backed by the United States and Great Britain, with regard to Rumania's future status, would have great bearing on Antonescu's policy. Naturally, L. Davila mentioned, the great source of worry to Antonescu and to Rumanians in general was the Soviet Union. I inquired whether Soviet assurances to Rumania would be accepted by the Romanians as completely reassuring us the fact that [] the same went with American assurances of a parallel statement by which he would be satisfactory to Antonescu.

M. Davilla turned to his chief liaison agent and stated that in his opinion, it was a good idea for a post-war settlement, Antonescu would be satisfied.

I inquired of M. Davilla whether, as a communication to Antonescu was in existence. He said "Yes" in the affirmative; a certain Iranian official had said "We're much on our side". He was sure that this official would be in a position to convey discreetly any necessary instructions which it might be desired to communicate.

Herewith a report which has just come to hand through Shepardson in London dealing with international opinion there regarding the Darlan affair.

In addition to its great general interest this report aroused a speculation in my mind which Mott Belin suggested I pass on to you for whatever it may be worth -- to wit; that the apparent unanimity of opposition to our Darlan policy may derive from a conscious or unconscious desire abroad to use the Darlan affair to discredit American influence in Europe. If, as I suspect, they want our help but not our hegemony here was a chance to smack us down on this intervention in important European politics?

I would like to give a round-up of international reactions to the American Darlan policy, both before and after Mr. Roosevelt's explanation of it.

Darlan is still recognized by the Americans as the administrator, or the factual head of the French Government, in French North Africa, with Giraud as Commander of the African French Forces under him. Llandin and some of the Vichy Cabinet Ministers are reported in North Africa, and Chautemps on his way from America. These developments have caused consternation among my international acquaintances in London, including the French, the British, the Americans, the Russians and the Exiled Governments. Never have I come across a consensus of opinion so unanimously hostile to American policy as is this case.

1) What originally looked like another Free French trouble, unfurled into an international political conflict among the United Nations. Everybody realizes that the British and the Americans have no political strategy in common. I have already reported on Mr. Churchill's washing his hands of the affair before DeGaulle. Every single Britisher I have talked to shrugs his shoulders at American adventures in European wonderland. The British press takes the same line in gentle terms, making a logistical case in favor of a purely military expediency in the American-Darlan wedding.

2) Another international comment is this: for the first time in this war the British and the Soviet diplomatics have become united against the American diplomacy. The Russians of London, occupying the highest positions in the Soviet Embassy, are unequivocally and determinedly for DeGaulle as against Darlan. They, I find, are the best informed about the details of the case. I have talked to two of them, both of them political commissioners and members of the Bolshevik Party, Mr. Gromof and Mr. Graur. They argue that it is not Mr. Roosevelt who accepted General Eisenhower's arrangements, but General Eisenhower who accepted Mr. Roosevelt's arrangements. These arrangements, they continue, are clearly a logical and inevitable consequence of a traditional and stubborn policy of the State Department, which consistently seeks agreement with the reactionary Catholics of western Europe (don't forget that Russians are either irreligious or Orthodox, and that they like other Orthodox Slavs, would rather be dead than Catholic). To support their argument the Russians of London point out: a) American pro-Franco attitude in the Spanish Civil War; b) American coddling of Otto Habsburg for a Central-European Confederation; c) American recognition of Vichy; d) American dealings with the Vatican through Mr. Myron Taylor;

- a) American boosting of Giraud and, worse, of Darlan, at the expense of DeGaulle.

"When my Russian acquaintances in London asked me what I thought of it all, I countered, "What do you think of this?" The answer, each time, has been a speechless grin.

- 3) All Americans I have talked to, including the members of my own office, hope the U.S. is using Darlan for temporary military tricks and will chuck him immediately afterwards. No one expects Mr. Roosevelt to accept Darlan for the duration of the war.

- i) The Free French are drawing together, in so far as London is concerned. I have reported the case of an anti-DeGaulist becoming DeGaulist. I could report other cases. The two DeGaulist emissaries - one of them was Mr. Pleyben - who were to go to North Africa to negotiate with Giraud last week, never left England because, I understand, the National Committee of the Fighting French refused to let them go to negotiate with Darlan.

From the Free French I get this argument: whatever objection may be raised against DeGaulle, he has a clean patriotic record, and Darlan hasn't. Why the Americans referred to deal with Frenchmen of unclean patriotic record is something, I am told, the Americans will some day have to explain to the French people.

In any case, the argument continues, the French can't any longer be accused of not being able to get together, for it is the Americans who prevent them from doing so.

- 5) American dealings with Darlan have thrown a veritable panic into the ranks of the Exiled Governments. As a Serb put it, "Let's pack and get out of here. Next thing you know, the Americans will make a pact with Nedić to liberate Serbia." "Why in hell did we oppose Germany and go into exile anyway?" was another comment. "If we had only had enough sense to be Quislings, we would now be in a position to negotiate."

Even after Mr. Roosevelt's explanation of the Darlan affair, the feeling runs high among the London exiles from the Continent. A cynical realization permeates their ranks that the Quislings have outsmarted the patriots and that, after all, it pays to be a traitor.

All the reactions & opinions I have heard could sum up this way.

A) The United Nations, in opposition to Kihlman, have proclaimed certain moral principles. These principles cannot be materialized by immoral actions.

B) American agreement with Darlan is a boon to all European quislings and a blow to all democratic principles. Many explanations will be needed to correct the bad impression of this error in political warfare.

C) American agreement with Darlan is a dangerous precedent, harmful to American prestige itself. For the first time since her entry into the war America intrudes in Europe's political affairs, and the first agreement she makes is with reactionaries and traitors.

D) Agreement with Darlan is a call for a French Civil War in the future. Therefore, whatever American lives may have been saved by this agreement, it is no economy of blood, because many more lives may be lost in some future accounting over the American action.

E) Mr. Roosevelt's explanation of agreement with Darlan, while pacifying at first reading, has following loopholes in second reading: aa) It was obviously forced by Indignation among the Allies; bb) it burgles an open door, that is, it explains the obvious: that agreement with Darlan is temporary, dictated only by reasons of military expediency. So is the British agreement with DeGaulle. Neither America nor Britain can set up a permanent French Government, and to say that it is up to the French people to choose their own government after the war is an explanation of the obvious.

Mr. Roosevelt's exclamation does not define the relation of Darlan's regime in one part of the French Empire to DeGaulle's regime in another part of the French Empire. Nor does it define the temporary character of Darlan's regime valid during the North-African campaign or for the duration of the war?

F) Even "military expediency" is doubtful as a ground for the recognition of Darlan: the resistance to American troops in French North Africa was greater than expected, and Darlan was unable to prevent it. He was supposed to turn the Vichy fleet over to the Allies, and he did not turn it over.

OFFICE OF STRATEGIC SERVICES
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

AMERICAN EMBASSY
LONDON

December 14, 1942

TO: Major Bruce
FROM: William P. Maddox

I asked Lyman Kirkpatrick to find out what he could about the secret session of the House of Commons on Thursday, December 10th -- convened to consider the Darlan affair. He turned my yesterday with the attached report which strikes me as being an extremely good job. I am forwarding it to you for the information of your office.

Enclosure
SA 1452

SECRET

TO: Mr. William P. Maddox
FROM: Mr. Kirkpatrick

I have ascertained the following facts concerning the secret session of Parliament on Thursday, December 10th, in regard to the continuance of the Darlan government in North Africa. These facts have come to me through an intermediary who talked directly with Mr. Anthony Eden.

In essence, this was what Mr. Eden, in company with the Prime Minister, told the House of Commons. He traced the entire course of events leading up to the Allied invasion of North Africa, describing in detail how the British government had been consulted on every move. Shortly before the actual invasion four American Agents who had been operating in North Africa came to London with a report for General Eisenhower. At this juncture the Foreign Office was asked if they would care to have a representative sit in on these sessions. The representative did, and it was stated that his relationship with General Eisenhower was most cordial, with the result that General Eisenhower appointed him as head of a special advisory committee on which these four Americans sat. When General Eisenhower moved his headquarters to North Africa this representative of the Foreign Office accompanied him, not as head of this advisory committee, but simply as a liaison officer. Mr. Eden told the House of Commons that the Foreign Office was constantly advised of all progress in the relations between Darlan and General Eisenhower.

It was stated that when General Eisenhower was at Gibralter he received an urgent message from Lieutenant General Mark Clark, asking him to come to Algiers to negotiate an agreement with Admiral Darlan. It appears that General Clark had been holding discussions with Darlan, and had reached the conclusion that Darlan was the only man who could stop the fighting. It appears that Giraud was asked to become head of French North Africa, but admitted his inability to secure any following among the African Colonial troops.

After the Darlan statement that he had assumed supreme command of all French North Africa, it appears that President Roosevelt sent hard orders to General Eisenhower that all future statements by Darlan of this nature should be stopped. The gist of this order, according to Mr. Eden, was that General Eisenhower should keep firm control over the statements and movements of Admiral Darlan .

Mr. Eden told the House of Commons that the British government has suggested to Ambassador Winant that a Minister of State, representing either Britain or the United States, be sent to North Africa to be political adviser to General Eisenhower, and to gradually assume administrative control of that territory. The British have intimated to Mr. Winant that his Majesty's government would prefer a British Minister of State in view of the greater British experience in colonial administration. Mr. Eden said that Ambassador Winant was returning to the United States within the next few days with this report.

SECRET

in his statement to the House of Commons, reported that he had been in constant communication with President Roosevelt on the situation in North Africa, and had been advised of each move made by the American military staff. Mr. Eden also said that it was his "understanding" that all the arrangements in North Africa had been made by the War Department, and that the State Department had not been concerned in the matter whatsoever. In his talk with my informant he said that he understood the compartmentalization in Washington which make it possible for the War Department to do this without consulting the State Department. When queried as to the position of Mr. Robert Murphy, who personally participated in the talks at Algiers, the Foreign Minister stated that he understood Mr. Murphy was operating as personal representative of President Roosevelt.

I was told that the House of Commons was very well satisfied by the explanation of the Foreign Minister and the Prime Minister on the Darlan affair, and that as far as the British government is concerned the matter is now in the hands of Mr. Winant, and they will await the results of his visit back to Washington.

Dear General Donivan:

It is with pleasure I am writing you at this time to wish you Sincere Merry Christmas and a very Happy New Year. I often make memories of our days here in 1947 - 1948.

I read the news you keep in the paper about the G.I.
service and I was proud and glad that in the battle of the Bulge
I wish that I were along with you. You were always a successful Commander. I have been in active duty since 1947 - 48

My dear Mr. Davies:

I have your letter dated March 8th. I do indeed recall our association in 1938, and it is a pleasure to hear from you again.

With reference to your enclosure I think it is very kind of you to suggest that the biographical material would be of sufficient interest to warrant inclusion in the program you mentioned. However, after considering the matter, I am inclined to feel for a variety of reasons that it might be advisable not to submit your suggestion at this time. I shall, of course, leave the decision to your discretion.

I am sending you, enclosed, a biographical sketch of yourself, and with your approval, would like to submit it to Mara, Inc., for use on the Dr. F. J. program.

It isn't a question of the price so much as it is that I would like to honor one whom I know has become famous in our War effort, as on this radio program they have had numerous Army men who have become famous through past performances in Government affairs.

You, no doubt, General, have heard this foremost broadcast at some time or other. I am asking you before submitting this sketch - (which was taken from the Encyclopedias Britannica) - if it meets with your approval. BIOGRAPHICAL SUMMARY OF
MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM STEPHEN STONE

He was born January 1st, 1888 at Buffalo, New York, the son of a railroad yardmaster and a school teacher. He was a United States Lawyer and Soldier.

He worked his way through Columbia University, and received his law degree in 1907. In 1916 he organized a cavalry troop in the National Guard and served on the Mexican border under General Pershing.

He saw active service in World War I with New York's famous Fighting 69th, rising to Colonel.

He won the nickname of "Wild Bill" for his daring and was decorated by the United States, French and Italian Governments.

In 1924, he was appointed assistant to Harlan Fiske Stone, then Attorney General, and was remained to that post by President Coolidge, 1925 to 1929.

In 1930 he ran unsuccessfully for Governor of New York State on the Republican ticket.

He was a military observer in the Spanish Civil War and in the Ethiopian campaign.

In July, 1940 he went abroad on a special mission for Secretary of the Navy Knox. On his return, he reported on Nazi Fifth Column activities in Europe.

William Joseph Donovan

He set out on another mysterious mission in December 1940 which developed into a 30,000 mile tour of Europe and African battlefields. This trip was described as a search for facts on the status of Allied resistance to the Axis.

On July 11, 1941, this man was named by President Roosevelt as coordinator of defense information at the head of a new intelligence agency, designed to filter information and propaganda pouring into the United States capital via press, radio and publications.

Dear General Tamm -

When I count the weeks that have passed since I had the pleasure of being with you on your safe return, I am extremely disturbed. I'd miss myself for not having written sooner. On the other hand, when I think back the miles I have traveled by airplane, land and sea during those weeks, I don't feel quite so badly, altho even so, which cannot say I am really "gratified" about it.

I really am in debt to you for that trip. It showed me certain important things. Showing you as you are interested the various institutions, I began to have an idea of the techniques that can be employed and what are the most helpful check points for an inspection trip.

My velocity time must be rather strictly limited so having regard of the complex factory intimately from the inside, I was in an most interesting position of being able to judge the plant in which this is carried on. It is difficult to judge from such an inspection compared with the actual facts. It seemed to me that your techniques were efficient and your inspection outstanding. But it also seemed to me that no one on the basis of such an inspection can do much more than have a general air of efficiency and know how like methods, and make pretty good relative assessment as between the groups. One cannot judge the efficiency ^{correctly} of the groups in terms of results obtained for opportunities presented and facilities available.

To do that, one must read the cable files,
 the reports of men returning from the field, and talk for extended periods with a large assortment of people, most of whom live to tell their woes to a historian. I am doing it.
 gradually.

I tried to tell you honestly how I felt about some of the problems that were still current, forgetting the ones that being past, are immaterial.
 The sending of physically unfit personnel, and those obviously having fundamental defects emphasized; & your names and numbers. Emphasized briefings of persons coming out, incomplete information about them in our files so that we wonder what to do with them when they arrive, promises to them at that end that are not, or cannot, be fulfilled at this — all this would seem so easy to eliminate or reduce to a inconsequential degree, - all this has had such a paralyzing effect upon operations.
 I realize that the task is not easy. But it is no good hanging little signs up in our offices saying "the difficult we do right away, the impossible takes a little longer", unless we really do make a daily step forward in the admission of ~~the~~ greater realization of the dimensions potential in this world you created.

I know that your last trip was not necessarily an inspection trip. There were other fish on fry, and I must say your cooking was excellent. The meal was not only attractive but has taste easier than I could hope on several occasions! I hope you'll come soon again and stay long enough to know the outfit all the way through. I believe you will be pleased with Dick's hardwork.

In view of your recent appointment concerning the trial of war criminals, I rather doubt whether you will be able to spend much time among us. My first reaction was one of "My God, that's not up to all that he is already carrying, they'll burn a good bone to death!" Then I remembered your faculty for high speed work at low tension, and also, in a quick flash back, that your hair is growing black instead of gray, and I concluded you could probably stand up under the punishment! My second reaction was that Dans, Brown, Fleischman, Katz & Hoffman should forthwith volunteer as brief-case carriers! For my part, however, I do not believe I would be very happy in the job! While I recognize the necessity for punishment, I am repelled by such a thought. I am directly concerned with manipulating anyone in taking his life as a punishment. In addition, the principles of the code are so difficult, to say nothing of the practical operations. On the one hand, I thoroughly believe that German officials should be tried for crimes which were put on the statute books of almost every civilized country - murder, arson, rape, assault and battery, false imprisonment etc. In my opinion, it will be no offense to the accused that he was charged with, or with - the ~~the~~ judicialized issue will be whether the measure is justified by imminent military necessity, or you will be in the view of the law that is established law. I would soon be in accord with the establishment of a few more crimes, such as the transforming of white populations from their habitat to a place where it was inevitable many would starve etc. But I do not believe in trying like ~~the~~ head of a state for the crime of making war for world domination, as per the arousing of the measure attendant upon the waging of that war, such as the torturing of a defenseless people, suppression of minorities. Too much defense is in my concern if allied bombing will come in, too much thinking of how the Leader was tortured and tried at Nuremberg, the odds, but because of his devotion to the cause of his beloved people, he did it. Too much danger of executing martyrs & the possible benefits are too small. The fear of punishment will now drained a future regeneration from Hitler's course (we must prevent that by becoming the 'cure' of a culture medium in which such tumors can grow.) But by trial and punishment of the local boys who set up the concentration camps and who can be tried for recognized crimes, you may not see people that will militate against that ability in a future period of world disorder. These, at least, are my frank opinions. I shall follow your course with interest.

I am giving considerable thought about how I can best contribute to the continuing fight for peace in the years to come after the Armed Stage is over. To go back to the law, but work for something like Inst. of Pacific Relations as an association; to go into local politics + work outward from a microcosm for a healthy, realistic democracy; or to work with the international security group or a full-time farm wife. It is a difficult choice. My wife is at San Fran with the job of updating a daily summary directly to the White House. I think I should let her do a desk in her own office, + when she goes home, "Mrs Davis" office, Lt. Davis speaks.

Good luck and many thanks for your kindness. I have a good day together. Sincerely, Jim Davis

P.S. I apologize for the assortment of examples before, but it's all I could get where I am at the moment.

Dear Ole:

I was talking with Ralph S. Damon, executive vice-president of American Airlines, and he said he was referring to Colonel Donovan on some application he was making for membership in the Foreign Policy Association. He wondered if Colonel Donovan would remember him and I said I was sure he would as Ralph Damon was one of our guests at a small dinner given for the Colonel after he returned from Sicily.

It occurred to me it might be well to advise whatever secretary of the Colonel's would receive any communication from the Foreign Policy Association, especially during his absence.

Could you pass this along to the proper secretary at O.S.S.?

I enclose herewith a memorandum from Lithgow Osborne which is self-explanatory. In view of the delicacy of this situation and in view of the probable lack of jurisdiction by the Third Naval District, I am sending it on to you for such action as you may consider proper.

I told Mr. Osborne that I was reluctant to press this type of matter except possibly in an informal way, more as information than as a request for action.

If you feel there is a real question of basic loyalty involved, then it is our duty to turn it over, but better I think in Washington than here.

I would appreciate hearing sometime what, if anything, you have done about it.

Date: January 7, 1948

Mrs. Rado has received word that one John Paul Dickson is now employed by O.W.I. while his wife (Mary Ann Kullmer) has had a job in O.W.I. in Washington from which she "resigned" recently.

Dickson spent about 12 years in Germany before the war. The last year or two he was in Berlin. He was hired by Sigrid Schultz (Chicago Tribune and Mutual Broadcasting Company) as broadcaster to America. His wife was also in Berlin, at that time engaged to a German music critic. She is extremely anti-semitic. They were both regarded within the radio newspaper fraternity as being the most friendly to the Nazi government of any of the group- in fact, as definitely pro-Nazi. From what Mrs. Rado knows of Dickson, we certainly would not consider taking him in OSS and unless O.W.I. has absolute proof that he has had a change of heart- which would be hard to get- O.W.I. ought not to employ him either. He volunteered for the Marine Signal Corps a few months ago and according to a letter from him, he has just been transferred to O.W.I. Both he and his wife enjoy the protection of the former U. S. military attache in Berlin, Col. Hohenthal. This is I suppose, strictly speaking none of our business and possibly there is nothing we can do about it, but I thought I would call the matter to your attention in case you felt there is some action which could be taken.

FROM: Mr. John C. Hughes

I had a long talk last evening with Commandant Daru who will be leaving in about ten days for North Africa to report to General Giraud on instructions from French Military Mission here. After his arrival Daru will get in touch with Colonel Eddy and I am convinced that he can be of great assistance to the OSS in that area.

He expressed a desire to see you and pay his respects before he left and I am writing to inquire if you plan to be here in New York this weekend as under the circumstances I would like to bring him around to the St. Regis to see you.

Whenever you make your plans for your next trip to New York, will you please ask your secretary to let me know.

INTEROFFICE MEMO

TO: General Donovan
FROM: W. E. Shepardson
SUBJECT:

DATE: May 21, 1946

Enclosed herewith is your letter of April 6, 1946 from Walter Berry concerning a man by the name of Peter Distratton, now in concentration camp in Spain.

You wrote on the note "for action, if desired".

Four of our men, including one recently returned from that area, have discussed this letter at length, and report to us as follows:

"We feel that the difficulties and the risks involved in making an effort to secure the release of subject from the concentration camp of Miranda de Ebro in Spain are so great that it should not be undertaken. The danger to our own organization of such an undertaking is such that we would be warranted in doing it only for one of our own men who was very important to us indeed."

Mr. General J. D. Smith*

Mr. General: For action
John Kersey of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, 25 Broadway, New York, N. Y. has just telephoned and asked me to send you the following information:

"There is a man named Peter Infeston who is a son of the man who used to run all of our business in France. The father is still in France with the family, but the son has gotten out but has been caught in a concentration camp in Spain. Some how or other he got a postal card to us from this concentration camp. We recognized his handwriting. He left France only two months ago. He was of the opinion that he might have some very valuable information. The name of the Camp is Campo de Concentracion, which is Skro, Andalusia, Spain. Maybe the Colonel, working with the State Department, might find it feasible to get him over here. From all the data we have he is doing his best to get out. We have complete confidence, not only in him, but in his father and his family. If you want any further information take it up with me and I will be glad to give it to you."

Sincerely yours,

Walter Berry

Dear Bill,

Since I saw you last many unhappy things have happened. The person I was supposed to work for never came back... from a trip to France. Then the old lady I was staying with died. Therefore I might be working for French section of O.W.I. and have given your name for references.

Do let me know if you come over. If I am no longer at the above address Mr. Vienot our ambassador here would always know how to reach me.

I hope this reaches you in time to wish you a very happy new year, with love from,

Dear Bill,

Just a few lines to let you know that EVERYTHING has gone very rapidly indeed & since I am leaving for London to-morrow (I expect to arrive at Gibraltar).

I am still very anxious about my son, &
I will not surrender until I can get him to safety.
Spain I will try from England - My father still be there & Princesse de Polignac is here same anyhow for the first few weeks.

I recommend you to now attempt and it leaving shortly for Washington sent by the Foreign Committee. This is Emmanuel d'Harcourt, a young man of extraordinary courage who has done trips to his France with only one leg. The other one being lost in the war. This should show Americans that many people even in high classes of society know how to behave.

Thank y u dear Bill, for all your affil-ness. Do let me know if you come through London, I enjoy speaking with you, and it brings back happy days.

Very affectionately yours

("Wellie")

SECRETALIASES: Helene Devogue
Helene DerrogneProbable cover-names: Berthe VULLIENIN
Wellie VULLIENINADDRESSES: Hotel Atlantic, Setevert
Hotel Tivoli, LisbonDESCRIPTION

Blonde, about 5 ft. 5, slim, smooth rounded face, large brown eyes, clear light complexion, rather full lips. About 37 years old. Dresses smartly though simply, has a cool and charming manner. Good conversationalist. Speaks French, English, German fluently, possibly Italian also. Definitely an aristocratic and cultivated type, though not typically French in physiognomy.

Passport: French, No. 1816; indicating that she is domiciled at the Hotel Majestic, Vichy.

PERSONAL HISTORY

Wellie
(See)

Married to a French nobleman, has lived in Paris the greater part of her life. Has children, presumably still in France. She has claimed on two different occasions that her husband - a) was working in France as a British agent; b) is now working in North Africa as a British agent.

She has had a prolonged love affair with the prominent author-flier, St. Exupery, until recently in New York, now flying in North Africa.

She paid a visit of several months to New York during 1941, apparently experiencing no difficulty in leaving and re-entering France.

According to one report, she discovered that she had cancer when she last returned to France from the U.S.

She is now in Lisbon, presumably waiting to go to North Africa, where she - a) wants to help the Allied Cause by working in the Intelligence Service; b) hopes to join her husband. It is more likely that she wishes to join St. Exupery there.

SECRETGENERAL COMMENTS

Because of her contacts (see further on) and her social background, it seems fairly evident that she has been somewhat of a Vichy sympathizer and hence a collaborator. Therefore, her social position would have brought her automatically into "the best French "high society" circles and into the upper reaches of international cafe society, both of which groups were heavily involved in the French collapse and in eventual collaboration with Germany.

More recently, according to reliable sources, shortage of funds and her rather anomalous position in Lisbon have made her accessible to the highest bidder. In the words of one source, she has "changed herself considerably," and is playing a purely opportunistic game. Among her more recent "lovers" have been Walter Smith, Oil Attaché at the American Embassy in Madrid, and Bocralha, wealthy Portuguese mine owner.

CONTACTSPORUGAL*SMITH, Walter

Address, Hotel Tivoli, Lisbon, or American Embassy, Alcalá Galliano, No. 4, Madrid. Oil Attaché in charge of the American Embassy, also controls the oil policy in Portugal. Connected with Socony Vacuum Oil Co.

Had given Helene a letter of introduction to Mr. Pinto Basto, which she had with her on her arrival in Lisbon.

According to source, subject is a "meddler in other people's business and considers himself not only a super-sleuth but also as far as spy work is concerned."

(The Socony Vacuum Co. has been noted for the pro-Axis sentiments of many of its employees, among them Anselmo Pinto Basto.

PINTO BASTO (probably Anselmo)

Local Manager in Lisbon of Socony Vacuum Co., and one of the rich men of Portugal. Reputed to be pro-Axis chiefly through fear of Communism. On her arrival in Lisbon, Helene had a letter of introduction to subject from Walter Smith. This letter was followed some days later by a telephone call from Madrid to the effect that no funds were to be advanced to her and that subject was to be careful.

de MONTAIGNE, Tassie

French, reputedly a great partisan for Vichy collaboration with Germany. Met Helene in the office of the Socony Vacuum Co., a few days after her arrival in Lisbon, presumably for the first time. They fell into each other's arms and said they were cousins. Subject did not show any surprise at seeing Helene in Lisbon.

On April 28th, 1943, an envelope was received from France addressed to the Socony Vacuum Co. of Lisbon, containing a small scrap of paper, written in pencil in French and beginning with the following words: "Mon amour cherie". It was just a short love note written in an illiterate hand. "Tassie" had given it two days later to Montague, who was in his office at that time. The latter jumped up from his chair and snatched it from him, declaring that the note was for him. A little later he called the secretary who opened the correspondence and seemed very anxious whether anyone else had seen it or knew of its existence.

SOLBERG, Col.

U. S. Military Attaché, with whom Helene is apparently on intimate terms. This is the third lady of suspect nature and activities whom subject has befriended. It appears that he is highly vulnerable to feminine charms.

It is believed that Helene brought with her a letter of introduction to subject from Walter Smith.

de TANG, Jacques

Unsealed letter to subject, addressed c/o Colonel Malaise, was among papers carried by Helene on her arrival in Lisbon. No other information on subject is available.

MALAISE, Col.

Sent by Vichy to Lisbon in April or early May of 1943 to attend to problem of caring for the former Staff members of the French Legation.

Unsealed letter to subject was among Helene's effects on arrival in Lisbon. In an accompanying letter to Walter Smith, Helene writes: "Would you be kind enough to hand my passport over to Colonel Malaise so as to obtain my visa for North Africa?"

ROUSSEAU, L.

Hélène reported to be on good terms with subject. No further information available.

NORMALIA

Wealthy Portuguese mine-owner, now regularly accompanying Hélène.

OTHER CONTACTS

Italian flyers of the Alfa Littoria planes, who stay at the Hotel Tivoli.

An unidentified man who visited her on May 2 and who speaks German, French and Portuguese fluently. Appears to be a German Jew.

Cosmopolitan circles in general, particularly the Portuguese.

de SAINT EXUPERY, Commandant A.

Well known French flyer-author (Wind, Sand and Stars, etc., etc.), formerly of Paris, in recent years in the United States, chiefly New York. Now flying for the French forces in Algeria. Has been lover of Hélène for several years. Has a wife, Constance, from whom he has been separated for some time. Apparently intended to divorce her and marry Hélène.

Although a French patriot, subject has been equivocal in his attitude towards France. Although he may not have been as straight Vichy as many thought while he was in the U.S., he was certainly never de Gaulist. This may be because his parents are still in France or because he is an extremely complicated personality, inclined to defeatism.

Although he claimed to be anti-social, professing dislike of "society", subject nevertheless went about a great deal, often with rich refugees and the international smart set.

SECRETUNITED STATES

PORTEK, Mrs. George French. Address: 371 E. 73rd Street, Office at 551 Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. Known to her friends as "Sister Portek". Sister of Sasha de Manziarly, Capt. in the Fighting French Forces. Close friend of Saint Exupery and of Helene. Censorship has resorted to restrictive action on some of the traffic involving these individuals. This has countless resulted in Helene sometimes resorting to personal friends as intermediaries on different occasions subject has received messages from Berthe Vulliemin and Nellie Vulliemin, concerning affairs of interest to Helene only. This would indicate that Berthe Vulliemin and Nellie Vulliemin are either covers for Helene or fictitious signatures of hers.

CORRESPONDENCE

From June, 1942, through April, 1943, there has been considerable cable traffic among the above-mentioned individuals, chiefly between Helene and St. Exupery, the former being first at Geneva, Switzerland (Hotel Cornavin) later at the Hotel Tivoli, Lisbon; the latter in New York. The content, always affectionately phrased, concerns itself either with the publication of St. Exupery's new book in France or with his proposed trip to Europe. There is nothing suspicious in the cable traffic itself, much of it being of a purely personal or business nature and entirely lucid.

Other names involved in this traffic are:

Philippe DAUBA, Hotel Richemond, Geneva

Countess Consuelo SAINT EXUPERY, New York City

Bernard H. ZEHRFUSS, Nice, France (apparently lover of above.)

Raymond GALLIMARD) Cannes, France - publishers of St. Exupery.
Gaston GALLIMARD)

Jean BALLARD, Marseille - publisher, "Cahiers du Sud"

Mauricio HOCHSCHILD, La Paz, Bolivia - Tin magnate, dubious sympathies.

Jean Gerard FLEURY, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil - Aviator, of dubious interests.

Jean REFOULE, Lisbon

Leila MEUNIER - Vichy secretary of Rene de Chambrun; has relatives in New York with the French Library.

Michel MARTIN, Buenos Aires

SECRET

Madame Rene MILLAT, London

Of these names, only MEUNIER, TIGUET and HOCHBERG might imply suspicious activities, although there is no evidence at hand.

SUMMARY

The suspicious aspects of Helene de Voigne's case arise from the following:

1. Her use of aliases.
2. Her contradictory statements concerning:
 - a. Her husband's whereabouts.
 - b. Her reasons for going to North Africa.
3. Her unrestricted travel in and out of France.
4. Her tie-up with Walter Smith, Pinte Busto, and the "Oeony Vacuum people."
5. Her friendship with Vichyite Tessia de MONTAIGUT.
6. Her association with Italian flyers of the Alfa Littoria planes, and various Germans at the Tivoli Hotel and elsewhere.

These facts, coupled with her general background, her present vagueness and her wide circulation among all groups and nationalities, would make her a likely instrument of Vichy - and therefore German - intelligence. For this reason her activities and correspondence should be closely watched, especially if she is permitted to go to North Africa.

My dear Mr. Dunn:

In the temporary absence of General Revenue from the written request of 4 August 1964 concerning information you have had been referred to me for determination. I wish to say at the outset that such procedures are determined by the Bureau of Internal Revenue; the information which follows is purely unofficial in nature and I am sending only to contribute some personal thoughts in the hope that they will be of assistance to you in making a proper determination.

Section 404.162 of Treasury Department Regulations dealing with withholding taxes, reads in part as follows:

"If a person receives as compensation for services rendered a salary and in addition thereto living quarters or meals, the value to such person of the quarters and meals so furnished shall be added to the compensation otherwise paid for the purpose of determining the amount of taxes subject to withholding. If, however, living quarters or meals are furnished to an employee for the convenience of the employer, the value thereof may not be included as wages subject to withholding."

Under a similar rule in section 1341 of the Internal Revenue Code, it is provided that compensation (Compensation) is the general rule in determining whether to withhold to cover income in other property which is held for another, the fair value of such property is to be included in taxable income (Capital Gain). A similar rule in the Code will also apply to capital gains which are required to be withheld.

MEMORANDUM

- 1 - 14 August 1964

Secretary and attach at their place of employment you are expected to do so). We value your services greatly. If the Government of the United States has no objection, we would like you to remain in the U.S. (see Ltr. 88). It may well prove that you will be more effective here than abroad. We have had some difficulty in getting the facts given to us but I am sure we have now got a good handle on the situation. We have been very impressed by your work and judging by your positive review in every field among the personnel, Chairman Deasey appears highly qualified in this view.

The matter is one to be worked out by yourself, the diplomatic authorities and the office of the Legal Counselor of International Relations. Perhaps the diplomatic authorities will agree that the increased workload the Secretary is not justified by the circumstances. If so, you should know if you can do your work from another few days away. If they continue the present situation, I would suggest that you get in touch with the Legal Counselor's Office and ask for a ruling on the matter. Your case lies wholly within the jurisdiction of that office.

If there is any further information I can obtain for you in this connection, please do not hesitate to call upon me. We shall inform General Deasey of your letter and this reply, upon his return.

Yours very truly,

Col. William J. Donovan,,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Donovan:-

I feel I should not be troubling you but you have been so generous to me when I came to you before that I hope you will help me out again.

I came to Pomona College a year ago as Head Resident in one of the large dormitories here. My salary is $72 a month for ten months with board and room. Pomona College has added $12 to my salary and takes out $11.60 out of my pay check for tax leaving me $60.40 a month for ten months.

My job is twenty four hours. I am on duty any hour of the day and night. I am subject to call from the girls. Board and lodging is a resident director is furnished because for her to discharge the duties of her position satisfactorily she must live in the house over which she has charge. We also serve as social hostess in the dining room at meal time. We must live and have our meals at our assigned places therefore our room and board should be considered as convenience to our employer and should not be subject to tax.

A tax book edited by Henry Karr, 5020 Woodland Ave., Phila., Pa. says "Board, lodging, etc. furnished by your employer for his own convenience should not be included in the tax." Also "Value of board, lodging etc. furnished as part or all of your compensation and not for convenience of your employer is taxable."

Oberlin College, where I have been employed for eight years before coming here does not include the price of board and room in the taxing of salaries of the head residents of dormitories. They base their decision on J. K. Lasser's book, "Your Income Tax," published by Simon and Schuster. The 1944 edition of this book has a table on page 8 headed "Compensation Paid other than in Cash." In the left-hand column you will find the rule for board and lodging furnished to various types of employees and in the last item under that head a statement applicable to "all others" which reads as follows with reference to the tax on board and lodging: Not taxable if for the convenience of your employer. Taxable if part of your compensation and solely for your convenience.

Pomona College takes this much tax out because they say that the Internal Revenue in Los Angeles said that they were to do so. I have written the office and I can not get any satisfaction out of them. I have also written Washington and the letter is directed to Los Angeles for reply. I am quite willing to pay my right amount of tax but I have started this investigation and I would like to know whether Oberlin College of Ohio or Pomona College of Calif. is correct on this issue. If it is not too much trouble would you please phone the Internal Revenue and send me this information? I will be ever so grateful to you.

Stephen Winchester Dana was taken by the Draft and released with Honorable Discharge papers in ten days time. He was disappointed for no country, but let him stay here and health, he was not eligible for other city on account of an eye injury, but they somehow thought his training in science was more valuable so they insisted that he should return to Cal. Tech. which he did. Tow after a struggle of eight years he has his Ph. D. In addition with a brilliant record back of him. He is now with the Shell Oil in Los Angeles.

I thought you would like to know what happened to the man you were so kind when I came to you for advice.

Again I want to thank you for any trouble I am causing using you.

With best wishes to Mrs. Donovan and yourself.

I thoroughly understand why Major Marrell considering her application.

It is my suggestion that Major Marrell pursue the matter no further.

Dear Charlie:

The attached is in connection with Mrs. William J. Dana about whom General Donovan asked us to write the Los Angeles Office.

I am very much inclined to agree with Major Marrell, but before writing him I would like to have your opinion. Naturally we want to do everything possible to assist a friend of General Donovan, but it seems to me that there are other places where Mrs. Dana's talents would suit to better advantage.

I was thinking that perhaps Frank Walker might be interested in Mrs. Dana as a supervisor of a girls dormitory at Stanford. There might be some of our mutual friends in Los Angeles who might be able to assist her at U.C.L.A., but I really do not think that she has the necessary experience to fit into the Los Angeles Office and run the civilian personnel there.

Dear Colonel Connely:

Attached find file regarding Mrs. William Jay Dana, Talcott Hall, Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, about whom you wrote us under date of March 18, at the suggestion of Colonel Donovan.

After a careful review of her Application and Personal History Statement, we do not feel that Mrs. Dana has had the experience or possesses the qualifications necessary to discharge effectively the duties of supervisor in charge of civilian personnel. In view of her age and having had no experience in supervising office personnel, we sincerely question her ability to qualify for a position in this office anywhere near the income which she states would be necessary.

Mrs. Dana appears to be a charming and delightful woman but there is considerable doubt in our minds as to whether her exceptional talents would be given expression in this kind of a set up.

We would like very much to have your concurrence before we write her saying that we do not have an opening in our organization which carries a salary commensurate with her particular talents. Any suggestions which you have to make would be appreciated. We shall take no action without your approval. Awaiting your reply, I am,

My Dear Mr. Maxwell.

I am very grateful for your letter and for the assistance you have shown me, and hope if I am fortunate enough to be able to serve you, that I can repay you.

I have been a widow for the last ten years and have struggled to get my two children an education, my son has now achieved for his work, "Excellent" his Ph. D. in geophysics, and is teaching at Cal. Tech.

I am anxious to help out in the war effort, and hope I may be of service in some field. I must continue to earn my living plus helping my son to finish his work, so would want something that was more or less secure.

Again I thank you.

Sincerely yours
(Mrs.) Rita Dana

April 9-1943.

I have been informed that Mrs. Dana has applied for the position of House Mother in the dormitory at Oberlin College and I would like the opportunity of expressing a word of recommendation in her behalf.

For three years I have been the pastor of the church attended by the parents of Mrs. Dana and where Mrs. Dana and her splendid family have attended during the summer months, while at home from Duke University where Mr. Dana, now deceased, was a professor and Mrs. Dana held the position of House Mother. She and her entire family are people of high character and refinement. She is capable, reliable and thoroughly competent. She is a talented woman with a beautiful disposition and is a wonderful mother.

I know of no one who I could more highly recommend for this position than Mrs. Dana.

Pastor of Community Church

Yours respectfully,
Wilbur D. Ramsey

* * * * *

Your letter concerning Mrs. Rheta B. Dana was awaiting me upon my return last week from a business trip to New York. I regret particularly my apparent delay in answering it since I am interested in helping Mrs. Dana in every way I can.

I do not know Mrs. Dana very well although I have talked with her a good many times and have had her daughter in college. I know Professor Dana slightly and, of course, have known intimate friends of Professor and Mrs. Dana.

Mrs. Dana has always impressed me as a woman of social charm, cultured, interesting, and able, and I know nothing whatever to contradict this impression. She has children of her own and the daughter whom I know well is a delightful, well-bred, honorable girl; the son I do not know. I should think that Mrs. Dana would have wisdom, tact, insight, and firmness in dealing with college women. I do not know her well enough to speak of her disposition and temperament nor do I know anything about her as a housekeeper, except that her own home was attractive and that she has been something of a social leader in her group. I should think there would be no question whatever about her in that respect.

I realize so keenly that it is, as you say, no easy task to guide young women in these days, and I know how hard it is to find the right kind of women for house mothers. Among all the women I have seen Mrs. Dana seems to me to stand out in the qualities we all desire. I wish I knew her well enough to speak more surely of her temperament and personal qualities but from all I have seen she would be most desirable, I should judge.

Mrs. Rheta B. Dana of Kelley's Island, Ohio, informs me she has applied for a position as House Mother at Oberlin College.

I have known Mrs. Dana for several years and have been impressed with her splendid qualities of heart and life, and it is my conviction that she would be a most suitable person for this position.

Mrs. Dana has a bright and winsome personality, a sincere desire to serve and always has a kindly interest in those about her.

She is a woman of wholesome Christian character and culture, and will faithfully discharge any duties committed her to the best of her ability.

Pastor, First Presbyterian Church

It is with pleasure that I comply with your request to write you concerning the qualifications of Mrs. Rheta Brown Dana for the position of house mother and chaperon.

I have known Mrs. Dana for about twelve years. For many years her husband was professor of Mechanical Engineering, which position he held with distinction in the North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering until he was called to Duke University, where he died shortly afterward.

During Professor Dana's connection with the State College, Mrs. Dana was an active member of the Woman's Club of the College and took a prominent part in all the social activities of the College. She always exhibited unusual poise and dignity without being stiff and forbidding. She was a good mixer, but kept unusually free of factions and controversies.

I believe Mrs. Dana knows well different types of young people and that she has the tact and the personality to deal with the problems of young college women. I have never known her to exhibit irritation in the social life of the College, for her tact and patience and tolerance have been her safeguard.

I really believe Mrs. Dana is socially, temperamentally, and intellectually qualified for house mother and chaperon.

I understand that Mrs. William J. Dana is an applicant for a position as House Mother at Oberlin College and I wish to commend her to you in the highest terms as a person possessing strong qualifications for this type of service.

Mrs. Dana is a most excellent and highly cultured woman. Her influence over young women would be of the highest kind. She is resourceful, enthusiastic, and yet judicious in temperament. Knowing something of the requirements for this important position, I do not hesitate to recommend her without any reservations. Any consideration you give to her application will be appreciated.

I am very glad to have you use my name as reference relative to a position as director of dormitories in some of our California colleges. I sincerely hope that you may be able to have a position of this kind that will enable you to be near your son. While I do not know you so well personally, Pat has told us so many lovely things about you that we feel we can give a hearty recommendation. If the places materialize, we shall no doubt be sending you from time to time in our fair state.

I want to thank you, not only for the nice things you said about Pat in your letter, but for your motherly—or shall I say big-sisterly—care and attention during the past year. Pat has greatly enjoyed you and has been enriched by her contacts with you.

Mrs. Owings and I regret that she plans not to return to Oberlin. We wish that she would take at least one more year, but she has about decided that she wants to attend a college in California, or at least one not so far away from home. It will not be so long now before the close of the school year will have come.

Please let me know if there is any aid at any time that I can render.

Paster, Santa Anna, California

Sincerely yours,

Harry Evans Owings

Mrs. Rhea B. Dana, whose husband died while in service at Duke University, has for five years been Director of a Dormitory in Oberlin. Her son has an appointment at a California institution and she would like to have a position in that part of the country.

She has heard, I am told, that there may be a vacancy at Mills. If there is I can commend Mrs. Dana to you with great confidence. I have a very high opinion of her. She has done well with her own children, which is the best recommendation of a woman that I can think of, and I believe that she can be counted on to do well whatever she undertakes to do. My best judgment is that you will find it hard to get a better woman for a guide and friend to girls.

If I can serve you further in this or any other way, please feel free to call upon me.

Mrs. Rhea B. Dana has asked me to write you in her behalf, in connection with a vacancy on Mills College staff for which she is making application. I am not quite clear as to the exact nature of this vacancy, but I am sure Mrs. Dana would not apply for it if it were not something for which her preparation makes her eligible.

Some years ago Dr. Dana, a most capable professor in the Department of Engineering of Duke University, died, and Mrs. Dana and her two children went to Oberlin, Ohio, where the children were put in school and Mrs. Dana assumed social oversight of one of the dormitories. I understand that she performed her duties there in a most acceptable manner; and that is just as it should be, for she is an able woman of fine character and persistence. Furthermore her personality is such that I cannot imagine her as anything but attractive to young people.

From Mrs. Dana's letter I learn that she desires to go to California, in line with some plans which her son Stephen has for doing graduate work in geology. I am confident that you would not regret engaging a person of Mrs. Dana's ability and personality. I recommend her strongly to your favorable consideration.

I am writing to commend to your consideration Mrs. William J. Dana of Kelleys Island, Ohio, for the position of House Mother at your institution. Mrs. Dana is a lady of broad culture, high ideals, a friendly and sympathetic nature, and strong moral character. Her own children have been reared into industrious, clean, upstanding young citizens. I am sure she would exert this same influence on dormitory residents. She will be both tactful and firm in discipline and young people usually yield to her wishes without it being necessary to issue a command. I understand that Mrs. Rhea Dana is being considered by you for a position as house mother and I wish to recommend her most highly.

I have known Mrs. Dana for the past 20 years. She is a woman of very pleasant personality and especially fine character, and I know definitely from my nephew who is an undergraduate at Oberlin College, that she has held a very good success in a similar position at Oberlin College.

She had a good general education and while her husband was living and connected with this institution she took a very active part in the social and religious life on the campus and in the city. Later, when her husband transferred to Duke University, she continued in the same way. After her husband's death she assumed the responsibility of the education of her daughter and son. She is a woman of fine culture, reliable, energetic, with a real interest in the welfare of young people and should make a valuable addition to any institution in a position which requires tact, common sense and understanding.

I write to you at the suggestion of Mrs. Rhea Dana of Kelley's Island, Ohio. Mrs. Dana is the widow of the late William J. Dana, sometime Professor of Engineering in Duke University. I have known her quite well for some years. She is a competent woman of good standing and is intelligent. I feel sure that she would do conscientiously and well any task intrusted to her and that you would find her entirely trustworthy. Of her experience in the type of work for which she is applying I cannot say, since until her husband died she was largely occupied with her household and her son and daughter. The daughter is a student in the Woman's College here. On every other score but experience, I think that you would find Mrs. Dana to be a desirable addition to your staff.

Dear Major Maxwell:

Mr. Charles Chester, who as you know, has left us to become Special Assistant to Colonel William Bremner, Director, Office of Strategic Services, asked me to write you in regard to a personnel matter.

Mr. Chester stated that you had a man (I think named Hamilton) serving as an office manager who wasn't "paying out" too well for you. Also it was his thought that your representative did not have quite the personality to do a public relations job that is required in a front office.

If these situations exist you may be considering some changes and this morning he learned of a possibility that might interest you. Colonel Bremner mentioned that a friend of his, Mrs. Maxine Dunn, who is now teacher at Taft Hall, Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, is considering going to California where two of her children reside.

Mrs. Dunn is a college woman who has had experience in the supervision of personnel.

If you are interested in exploring this possibility you could write her for a description of her experience.

In any event it is an idea that Mr. Chester and I thought worth while passing on to you.

Will you let me know my developments?

Very truly yours,

My Dear Mr. Tolson,

I wrote to you a month ago today about government work & military representation in some capacity in the next, as I might be near my birthplace, but I have recently heard of a possibility in which I had I believe would be of great interest and I also believe I could make a contribution if I were given an opportunity.

It has come to my notice that the government is building dormitories for girls in their employ, and if positions of school directors are available it is as far as possible that the government will take over my place here for the navy, in the very near future so I am concerned about a doctor position.

I have been Social Director of "Galaxy" Hall, at Oberlin College ever since my David's death ten years ago. I now have the largest girls dormitory on the campus.

You may write for further information to - Dr. Ernest H. Tolson Pres; Miss Margaret Woodworth, Dean of Women; Dr. Carl F. Kitchee, Dean of College, all of Oberlin College.

Enclosed are some commendations that may give you something of my background.

Many thanks and kindest personal regards,
Sincerely yours
Director of Galaxy Hall, Oberlin, Ohio David.

Your letter of June 19 in re Mrs. Rheta Brown Dana is before me, and it affords me great pleasure to state my reaction as to Mrs. Dana.

She first came to us at Duke University some three years or more ago, when her husband was employed as instructor in one of the departments. They were members of the Presbyterian Church of which I am a member, and I came in contact with them in Sunday School work, and in the social life of the University.

After Dr. Dana's untimely death Mrs. Dana came to me for advice in regard to winding up her deceased husband's estate, and I had ample opportunity to form an opinion of her from a business standpoint. I found Mrs. Dana to be a lady who reaches a conclusion not hastily or upon impulse, but after mature reflection; not dictatorial but sympathetic and yet one who does not permit sympathy to dictate when duty calls for a different decision. I think she possesses those different traits of character that would make her ideally fitted for the position with you that you indicate, and with her example and advice would be of immeasurable value in moulding the plastic characters of the young girls with whom she would come in contact.

Your letter concerning Mrs. Alice M. Dana was awaiting me upon my return last week from a business trip to New York. I regret particularly my apparent delay in answering it since I am interested in helping Mrs. Dana in every way I can.

I do not know Mrs. Dana very well although I have talked with her a good many times and have had her daughter in college. I knew Professor Dana slightly and, of course, have known intimate friends of Professor and Mrs. Dana.

Mrs. Dana has always impressed me as a woman of social charm, cultured, interesting, and able, and I know nothing whatever to contradict this impression. She has children of her own and the daughter whom I know well is a delightful, well-bred, honorable girl; the son I do not know. I should think that Mrs. Dana would have wisdom, tact, insight, and firmness in dealing with college women. I do not know her well enough to speak of her disposition and temperament nor do I know anything about her as a house-keeper, except that her own home was attractive and that she has been something of a social leader in her group. I should think there would be no question whatever about her in that respect.

I realize so keenly that it is, as you say, no easy task to guide young women in these days, and I know how hard it is to find the right kind of women for houses mothers. Among all the women I have seen Mrs. Dana seems to me to stand out in the qualities we all desire. I wish I knew her well enough to speak more surely of her temperament and personal qualities but from all I have seen she would be most desirable, I should judge.

Very sincerely yours,

Senate, North Carolina

I write to you at the suggestion of Mrs. Mose Dana of Kelley's Island, Ohio. Mrs. Dana is the widow of the late William J. Dana, sometime Professor of Engineering in Duke University. I have known her quite well for some years. She is a competent woman of good standing and is intelligent. I feel sure that she would do conscientiously and well any task intrusted to her and that you would find her entirely trustworthy. Of her experience in the type of work for which she is applying I cannot say, since until her husband died she was largely occupied with her household and her son and daughter. The daughter is a student in the Woman's College here. On every other score but experience, I think that you would find Mrs. Dana to be a desirable addition to your staff.

Yours very truly,

W. T. Laprade,
Professor of History

Duke University

Durham, North Carolina

I have your recent letter which I found on my desk on my return to my office after a few days absence from the University.

I came to know Mrs. Naea Brown Dana rather well when she came here as the wife of Professor Dana a few years ago. Professor Dana lived after coming here only about a year and a half, and since then I have seen very little of Mrs. Dana. However, I do regard her as an unusually fine woman. She has been greatly interested in just such work as that for which she has applied to you. We have thought of her here but have had no openings whatever. So far as I know, she should have sufficient wisdom and tact to handle problems such as any person in the position in question would have to solve. I believe also that she does have the understanding and the firmness. She was very much liked here by the women of the University, many of whom I have heard speak very kindly of her.

She has a grown daughter, now a junior with us, and a younger son. Her association with college people and with her own children ought to fit her well for the sort of work for which you are considering her.

Very cordially yours,

W. H. Wannemaker,
Dean of Busey Library
Franklin & Marshall College

I am very glad to have you add my name as reference relative to a position as director of dormitories to some of our California colleges. I sincerely hope that you may be able to have a position of this kind that will enable you to be near your son. While I do not know you so well personally, Pat has told us so many lovely things about you that we feel we can give a hearty recommendation. If the plans materialize, we shall no doubt be seeing you from time to time in our fair state.

I want to thank you, not only for the nice things you said about Pat in your letter, but for your motherly--or shall I say--big-sisterly care and attention during the past year. Pat has greatly enjoyed you and has been enriched by her contacts with you.

Mrs. Owings and I regret that she plans not to return to Oberlin. We wish that she would take at least one more year, but she has about decided that she wants to attend a college in California, or at least one not so far away from home. It will not be so long now before the close of the school year will have come.

Please let me know if there is any aid at any time that I can render.

Sincerely yours,

Harry Evans Owings.

I have been informed that Mrs. Dana has applied for the position of House Mother in the dormitory at Oberlin College and I would like the opportunity of expressing a word of recommendation in her behalf.

For three years I have been the pastor of the church attended by the parents of Mrs. Dana and where Mrs. Dana and her splendid family have attended during the summer months, while at home from Duke University where Mr. Dana, now deceased, was a professor and Mrs. Dana held the position of House Mother. She and her entire family are people of high character and refinement. She is capable, reliable and thoroughly competent. She is a talented woman with a beautiful disposition and is a wonderful mother.

I know of no one who I could more highly recommend for this position than Mrs. Dana.

Yours respectfully,

Wilbur D. Ramsey.

Memorandum to Colonel W. J. Donovan

From: Charles S. Cheston

Subject: Mrs. Rhea Brown Dana

It is possible that the Los Angeles Office of the Officer Procurement Service may have use for Mrs. Dana in personnel work to supervise the reception and information desk, and do preliminary screening. When I visited the office ten days ago, they were considering looking for such a person.

Colonel Connely, Chief of Field Service, O.P.S., is writing the officer in charge of the Los Angeles Office today, to ascertain if they care to consider Mrs. Dana, and I shall report to you as soon as I hear from him.

My dear Mr. Donovan:

In these times of strain and stress, my position as director of a dormitory is not at all secure, so I am glad to say and get into service necessary to our government, so I can do of more vital help.

My family, a son and a daughter, are in California and Arizona, so I would prefer locating out there if it were possible to do so.

I am still grateful to you for your letters when I wrote you regarding Stephen, my son, he was drafted as you know, and then given honorable discharge, he is now a student at California Tech and will get his M.B. in Physics, after next year, he has the good fortune of a fine scholarship, and the extreme good fortune of working with Dr. Gitterberg, the great physics man.

I have had a college background, and lived as the wife of Prof. Wm. J. Dana when he taught at University of Pennsylvania, Johns Hopkins, U. of N. Carolina, and Duke University. Since Mr. Dana's death I have been hostess and director of Talcott Hall, a dormitory of ninety-six girls. On Mrs. Roosevelt's recent visit to Oberlin, it was my good fortune to have her here at Talcott Hall.

I could handle positions of supervision or personnel work. I have had a good opportunity for character study these past eight years. I feel that I should not have bothered you, for I know that you have much to take up all your time, but I was so at a loss to go about getting a position, such as I seek, that I thought, without too much trouble to you, I might secure information of value.

I am so grateful to you for any interest shown me. Thank you so very much.

Sincerely yours,

My dear Mr. Donovan:

Stephen's latest news from Fort Mac Arthur where he was sent on Monday for entrance into the Army, after a two week furlough, following his induction, physical and sworn in process, here in Los Angeles two weeks ago, is that he is to given "Honourable Discharge" from the Army. It seems that his eye condition can not place him in 1 B but definitely places him in 4F. I suppose it was the failure of his draft board to classify him properly. He has had a lot of trouble, expenses and loss of his summer job, resulting from the failure of the Board.

The Army doctors feel his efforts to the government are best applied in asking him to return to Cal. Tech where he will continue to study and teach Defense courses, so he is awaiting his discharge at Fort Mac Arthur.

I am so sorry to have bothered you so much, please forgive me and again let me thank you for any time given to us.

Stephen, I assure you will be a great satisfaction to his country some day; he has the capacity for big things

My dear Mr. Donovan:

I do thank you so much for your very fine letter. I appreciate your advice and help more than I can say.

Stephen left for Fort Mac Arthur at San Pedro, Cal. this morning. He hopes to find something he can handle well there, but of course does not know what it will be. He has 18 clasifications; they are being used to replace 1 A's. I wonder if you could help him to be placed in the teaching of math or physics at some camp. He has had a lot of experience in teaching having had a position at Whittier College and University of Southern California for the past two years while getting his M. S's (?) degree.

Stephen is definitely a student and a teacher and can best serve his government in that capacity. At twenty two he has made four honor societies; Phi Beta Kappa; Phi Kappa Phi; Sigma Xi and Sigma Gamma Epsilon.

There is a chance in the draft of him being given anything to do, and he tried to avoid that by asking admittance into certain military service, but his eye condition would not pass him; he was turned down everywhere. He has applied for the numerical search but has had no reply. Could you see if he could be placed in it. A fine experience for him and a great service to his country if he could make it.

I fear I am being a terrible bother, but, Mr. Donovan, I am alone and I do appreciate anything you can do and all you have done. I shall be here at Apt. 408, Astor Arms Apts., Cor. 5th & Gramercy St., Los Angeles, Cal. until August 1st, then I go to a cousin's; # Mrs. V. M. Freeman, 735 Virginia Terrace, Santa Paula until Sept. 3rd. Then to my daughter's; Mrs. H. Schlag, 523 N. Willetta St. Phoenix, Arizona until September 24th. You can address me at the above places.

AUGUST 2nd, 1942.

Dear Mr. Donovan:

I am now in Los Angeles with my son, having arrived on Saturday, August first.

Stephen has been refused entrance in the Meteorology and also Engineers' Aid, on account of his eye condition. He had very fine letters from Headquarters commenting on his background, but felt the eye strain would be too much of a risk, so those channels are closed.

Stephen was inducted into the Army, July 27th; he has a two week furlough which expires on August 10th. He hopes there will be some teaching position available to him at one of the camps in this section, his hay-fever tendency would make it more comfortable for him if he were left out here; however, he is ready to do whatever the country demands of him but wished it were something in his line of work.

I want to correct a statement in a former letter. I said Dr. Campbell of California Tech. was in Washington; it was Washington State my son had referred to in his letter, so that is why he could not contact you.

Stephen has been placed in F B I limited service. If there is anything you can do to help him in something interesting but necessary to the country program, both he and I will be most grateful to you.

Stephen has applied for work with the Strategic Mineral Search, planned under the National roster of Scientific and Specialized Personnel, on the recommendation of Dr. Tiefe (?) of the University of Southern California but has not heard anything as yet.

I shall be at Los Angeles Astor Arms Apt. # 408, Cor. 8th & Grammercy St. until August 15th.

We are so very grateful to you.

Dear Mrs. Dana:

I received your telegram and your letter. I inquired into the matter of Stephen's placement. Of course the assignment of draftees to various kind of jobs is left entirely to the Army officials. I have no acquaintance with the people who make these assignments. It is practically all done by the local commanding officers who have working under them placement personnel experts. I feel sure that these experts will make every effort to place him where his knowledge of MeteoroLOGY and geology will be put to the maximum use. I believe that he will be required to take the usual preliminary military training of about thirteen weeks and after that he will be put in the specialized activity where he can best serve. I do not believe that you should be so much concerned about this as I know the Army is making a real effort to try to make proper placements.

I have not heard from Dr. Campbell but of course will be glad to talk to him when he gets in touch with me.

Sincerely,

William J. Donovan

My dear Mr. Donovan:

Again I ask your pardon, but I am at such a loss and do need your help so very much. I am alone and no one to advise me.

I telegraphed you that the Draft Board in Los Angeles took Stephen on July 25. He has a 2 week furlough. About ten days ago he took his physical for the meteorology, but we are afraid they will not take him for he has vision in one eye only, the other looks about normal, but it has no lens. A B.B. gun accident in his youth. Stephen does not mind serving, wants to, but he could not get in the service on account of this deficiency. I believe you could help to get him into the meteorology or else the new Reserve officers group being formed in Washington for geology men to locate minerals for the government.

Dr. Campbell of Cal. Tech at Pasadena, where Stephen was to continue study and teach Defense courses is in Washington. I have written Stephen to have him see you, so if he is still in Washington you may expect him. He knows all about Stephen's case.

I am summing up his background on a separate sheet enclosed.

Mrs. Rhea Brown Dana
2 Alcott Hall
Oberlin, Ohio

Dear Mrs. Dana:

I have your letter, and I am returning the enclosures.

My judgment is that your boy and Mr. Campbell have made out an excellent case for occupational deferment and it would appear to me his appeal should be successful. I wish there were something I could do to help, but I, of course, have no influence in matters of this kind. In our work here we have adopted a very strict policy and have not requested occupational deferment for any of our employees, except where the services of that person are absolutely indispensable. I believe this has occurred only once or twice.

The only other suggestion I have is that since he seems to be qualified for a commission, he should go to the nearest Army headquarters and file a formal application for a commission in the branch of the Air Corps which he mentions. I understand that applicants for commissions are entitled to have draft deferment pending the result of the application.

I would not worry too much about it, as I am sure the boy will get along well no matter what happens, and will be able to use his specialized talents.

Sincerely,

William J. Donovan

Dear Col. Donoradis

I am so sorry
to bother you, but would you read the enclosed. You will understand my reasons.

My daughter is the daughter of Mrs. Stephen J. Davis, who shared her eldest son, William Fay, who died many years ago. When he was a member of Duke University & Mrs. Stephen J. Davis was a friend of the late Rev. Dr. Dexter (Rector of Buffalo with whom she played) now, Dr. Harry Truman making his mother. Davis a cousin of Mrs. Donoradis.

I have been Director of a girls dormitory at Harkins College since Mrs. J. Davis' death and have been able to educate my two children, my son, as you see in the enclosure.
The enclosed letter describes the plate that he took to the Civil Service examination.

and first received date needed & in what order he has or intended attending, and finally for Gravelle, from the Committee and the Library, last of all, the Committee's own copy of the book.
How you can do this I don't know, but you have three days now to work on it.

John Steinbeck may be available also in the fine public library. His best work, I suppose, is in a leisurely, somewhat off-beat style, but the author has a most attractive eye which is like a picture, simply & his subject immediately apparent. He is not hurried, the time had. Many good books have been written, but I think the best style is the one of California, like the one mentioned above.
Also the early James M. Cain books.

This difficulty, though high, can be overcome suggested at a Board. That would be the considerable & considerable. We can make transcription, etc., more rapid by getting less drafty, and the consideration is that if this Board can be established & run, that that was one solution.

However I should not take time with extra sources you & others can do more plently but if we are going to no author bind up his work in hand to proceed. If there is any way you can do on anything that I could suggest I would be so happy and indeed is grateful to speak on your shoulder for a chance (you have no staff) in the Government.

Sir, Dear Col. Deacon:

I am so sorry
to bother you, but when you read this enclosed you will understand my reason.
