4. The Division believes that unless the office which is in contact with [redacted] disposed to interrogate him intensively regarding these expenses, the claims should be accepted as valid and credited against his indebtedness to the Agency. The gasoline purchases are supported by what appear to be genuine receipts and in general practice receipts for contact expenses are rarely provided. There thus appears to be no means of disproving the validity of the claims other than through the securing of a statement from [redacted] the effect that the amounts claimed were not actually expended for operational purposes.
