Mr. Anthony Eden says that the Soviet Union doesn't understand what is meant by "free elections." The British foreign minister went on to explain that any election in which the communists can be sure of the final result is considered to be free. And, we may add, the communists are every particular about having the voters walk into the polls under their own power. It gets very sticky when they have to drag the voters in.

Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, declares that we tell Russia too much. His quote is as follows: "Sometimes I think we go too far in what our government gives out officially and in what is published in the scientific and technical field. We tell Russia too much." And, of course, if there's any little secrets we have neglected to give them the communists and subversives will make certain that nothing is overlooked.

If Moscow is watching, the Poles are only kidding. The communist Polish government is now pleading with private farmers to produce because the collective program has failed. A dirty capitalist plot?
