1. [REDACTED] reported in from [REDACTED] and I had a brief talk with him about his assignment to the Office of Logistics. I emphasized to him that it was a big complex and responsible job and that there would be some people in the Office of Logistics who might resent his being moved in over a large group of professional Logistics Officers. I also emphasized that Jim Garrison needed his help, that Jim was a very strong-minded person and that he demanded unswerving loyalty from his subordinates, including his Deputy. I think Alan correctly anticipates all of the problems that he will encounter and I have no doubt that he will fit into this picture quite well.

3. I talked to [REDACTED] about the possibility of working for Emmett Echols in the Office of Personnel. I think that he wants very much to do this but is reserving his decision until he has an opportunity to talk with Mr. Kirkpatrick sometime next week.

4. Gates and I met with the Director and General Cabell for a few minutes inasmuch as I am turning over the reins to Gates tonight.

a. We told the Director that the annual budget papers would be over for him to sign within a few days and that a draft of a paper to McGeorge Bundy commenting on the feasibility of leaving the Clandestine Services out of the new building would also be over today.

b. I alerted them to the fact that Dick Bissell and I had concurred in the recommendation of the FE Division to give up [REDACTED]. They are not convinced at this point in time that this is the wise thing to do.

c. We also discussed the move to the new building and I told the Director again that while we still planned to move in September and keep the pressure on at all points in order to try to do so, we must recognize that we might well have to defer for two or three weeks. He is, however, keen on moving people in almost room by room as the space becomes available.

I told him that we were prepared to do this and had anticipated this possibility but that our security considerations would make it impossible to move in the same way that a business firm would move into a commercial building. I think that he understands this.
