REF : Memorandum SPM 7-514, dated 29 January 1957

1. The referenced memorandum, which forwarded the SPD approval of a technical proposal, indicates that the contractor is to provide "for future spare parts of modifications to the system," and spare parts for the "alert system." 2. Spare parts for future modification is interpreted to mean changes now in progress, or changes as a result of circuit improvements requested as a result of acceptance tests. Certain changes have been incorporated in unit number two, and the specific parts have already been furnished us to incorporate these changes in unit number 1. Also, new relays have been indicated for the alert light feature of the system which is referred to in the referenced memorandum as the "alert system." The contractor has installed these new relays in unit 2 and will install the new relays in unit 1, or will furnish the relays to be installed by us.

3. The [Redacted] spare parts proposal is based on a 10% replacement of electrical parts, and the components furnished will reflect such changes that have been recently incorporated, or that are now under consideration as a result of such tests on the delivered unit. This action on the part of the contractor is therefore considered acceptable, and fulfills the requirement of Paragraph 1 of the referenced memorandum.
