NOTE FOR: D/DCI/NIO

SUBJECT : Rockefeller Recommendations

One stray thought I have not heard mentioned in the various discussions. It concerns the Inspector-General.

- Obviously this function is going to be beefed up.
- Both for cosmetic and real-world functional purposes, I would suggest some thought be given to attaching a senior officer to each Directorate as the Inspector-General's legate.
- If the IG office is to be expanded, as I would guess is inevitable, it seems to me that four or five bodies attached to the Directorates (and perhaps the DCI's office) would be more effective than simply multiplying the present staff. They could serve not only as the IG's man for the usual purposes, but also as ombudsmen who by preventive maintenance could forestall personnel and other problems before they get serious. This addition would improve communications between the IG and the troops (historically rather poor) and assist the DDs as well. It would also be a highly visible step in fulfillment of the recommendation.
- The people would have to be senior, widely respected for honesty and integrity, etc., or it would be worse than useless.
