3. The 47th Infantry Division (Figure 1, Table 1), a subordinate of the First Army Group, is reported to occupy the easternmost sector of the North Korean defenses along the DMZ, from approximately 38-20N 128-07E to 38-37N 128-17E. The defense sector immediately to the west is reportedly occupied by the 13th Infantry Division. Those units reportedly subordinate to the 47th Infantry Division are as follows:

a. A barracks area (reportedly the 47th Infantry Division Headquarters) contains a headquarters-type building, three administration-type buildings, ten barracks, and numerous support-type buildings (Figure 2).

b. A tank company area (reported as an unidentified tank unit) contains one administration building, two barracks, and four tunnel-served firing positions with a reverse-slope tunnel entrance (Figure 2).

c. A probable infantry regiment area (reportedly the 113th Infantry Regiment) is a well-dispersed area containing 23 barracks, numerous support-type buildings, and numerous interconnecting trench systems (Figure 3).

d. A probable infantry regiment area (reportedly the 123rd Infantry Regiment) contains one headquarters-type building, 40 small barracks or quarters, and numerous support buildings (Figure 4).

e. A probable infantry regiment area (reportedly the 124th Infantry Regiment) contains a headquarters-type building, 37 barracks, and numerous support buildings. This area is 17 nautical miles north of the DMZ and is probably a reserve regiment (Figure 5).

f. A probable artillery regiment (reportedly the 35th Artillery Regiment) contains a headquarters-type building, 12 barracks, numerous support buildings, nine 4-gun tunnel-served artillery batteries which comprise two probable howitzer battalions and one low-trajectory gun battalion (Figure 4).

g. A probable mortar regiment (reportedly the 42nd Mortar Regiment) consists of ten barracks and six 6-position 120mm mortar batteries (Figure 4).
