RECENT MILITARY CONSTRUCTION ACTIVITY,
PEKING MILITARY REGION, CHINA

1. Eighteen newly constructed barracks areas were identified in the Peking Military Region of China [redacted] 25X1
[redacted]; nine additional barracks areas in the military region have undergone major expansion (Figure 1). 25X1

2. There appears to be a trend throughout the military region of the military forces returning to barracks facilities [redacted] as we began to see increasing 25X1 numbers of equipment and weapons at known, established barracks areas. This trend is further evidenced by 13 of the 18 newly constructed barracks areas in Shansi Province. Since June of 1971 [redacted], there have been numerous sightings of weapons dispersal areas throughout the province. 25X1
In many areas the weapons were parked in villages of no apparent military significance.* With the construction of these barracks areas in the province, there has been a gradual movement of equipment and weapons into these new areas. The barracks construction activity in the province has not, however, completely phased out the weapons dispersal areas.

3. Twelve of the 18 newly constructed barracks areas were at least regimental in size. Sixteen of the new barracks were occupied, although construction may not have been completed.

4. This report contains a table which provides descriptions of the newly constructed and expanded barracks areas, an annotated map, and two photographs.
