One of the changes brought about by the North Korean puppet regime is the Sovietization of Pyongyang City. For example, the main street running from the railroad station to Moranbong has been renamed "Stalin Street," and the substations along the street-car line are named "Stalin Station No. 1, 2, 3, etc." Historic Moranbong is now Molotov Hill, Daedonggang has been renamed Lenin River. The wide street in front of the city hall in Pyongyang is now known as Kim Il Sung Square. To create an impressive front, the communists ordered business establishments such as restaurants, hardware stores, etc., moved away from so-called Stalin Street. The order was compulsory and business owners lost their property.

Russians and their Korean hirelings went to extremes in broadcasting that Soviet troops had completely withdrawn from North Korea. However, today Russian soldiers are seen by the hundreds in Pyongyang City. All the propaganda about Soviet troop withdrawal is sheer nonsense. In 1945 the Soviet Occupation Army took over the Pyongyang Commercial School and converted it into a school for Russian children only. The strange part of the story is that today there are more Russian children in that very same school than there have been at any other time. Where do the Russian children come from if the Russians have actually withdrawn from North Korea as has been claimed by the Korean Communists?
