1. In the autumn of 1952 when the navy was carrying out an exercise between Sopot and Gdynia the underwater echo-sounder apparatus recorded the presence of an unknown submarine.

2. Depth charges were dropped over the area where the submarine was reported to be, and after the second attack the echo died away; it was presumed that the submarine had been sunk.

3. The officer who gave the order to attack was arrested on the charge of failing to use other means of compelling the submarine to surface.
