One day in the summer of 1953, four trucks with about 50 Hungarian parachutists drove up to the motion picture theater in Varpalota (P-43/D 89). The soldiers were being stationed at an airfield about 3 km northeast of Varpalota. The airfield referred to was known as "Inota" airfield. The field had served as an auxiliary airfield during World War II and, allegedly, was temporarily occupied by the Hungarian Air Force for a few times after the war.

Comment. The last information received on the Varpalota airfield, also referred to as Inota airfield, dates back to 1947. At that time, the field served as a testing and training field. The correctness of the information that the field was occupied by Hungarian parachute units cannot be verified.
