1. On 4 October 1954, an overhead telephone line was seen east of Burg. It ran along the Reesen-Hohenseeden road toward the northwest via the Ihle Kanal, proceeded east of Ihleburg and, from there, ran to the ferrying point near Parchau and on toward Kobbel. A second line branched off at the ferrying point near Parchau and ran via Kehnert and south of Mahlwinkel, crossed the railroad line and turned toward the northwest. Another line ran from Kobbel along the Birkholz-Tangerhuetten road, crossed the railroad line south of Tangerhuetten and went toward the west. A bridge was built over the Elbe River between Parchau and Kehnert. Numerous tracks of motor vehicles which ran in all directions along the western bank of the river indicated that a bridge head was formed on the western bank in the course of the attack which was directed westward across the Elbe. 1

2. At 1300 on 4 October, trucks [redacted] drove along the Tangerhuetten-Luederitz road (15 km southwest of Stendal); 10 trucks [redacted] drove along the road from Tangerhuetten toward Dolle. At about 1400, many vehicles and tanks were seen in the woods southeast of Luederitz, on either side of the Luederitz-Dolle road. About 30 camouflaged trucks were parked in a woods west of Mahlpfuhl (west of Tangerhuetten). At about 1500, about 25 trucks and 4 M-13 rocket launchers [redacted] passed through Luederitz toward the north. Twenty other trucks [redacted] and 1 armored personnel carrier followed. 2

3. The following movements were noticed on 5 October:

At 0850: Mahlwinkel railroad station: about 30 trucks including [redacted] troops with red-bordered black epaulets were entrained. Several guns, apparently ready for entraining stood in a woods near the station. 3

1. Comment. Since major contingents of engineer units assembled on the Elbe River, it is possible that more river crossing facilities were established in addition to the bridge between Parchau and Kehnert.
