1. Gertruda Sekaninova, a Czechoslovak delegate to the 1954 session of the UN General Assembly and Deputy Foreign Minister in Prague, received the following instructions in June 1954 from Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin:
2. Delegations were to proceed in such a manner that major issues under discussion with the West, such as control of atomic energy, limitation of armaments, etc., should be kept alive, and interest in such problems should not be allowed to flag until 1956. Negotiations are to be dragged out until then.
3. Independently from the instructions given to Sekaninova, other Satellite and Soviet delegates sent to other international conferences, whether economic or political, also seem to have been given identical instructions. All of them were to drag out discussions until 1956.
