The new railroad bridge over the Neisse river near Goerlitz has not yet been opened. Residents of Goerlitz stated that sections of the bridge had sunk, and that additional repair work has thus become necessary. Scaffolds were observed on the eastern portion of the structure. Large quantities of construction material were seen on the bridge which was guarded by Soviet soldiers who were black-berdered red epaulets. 4

- 1. Effective with the summer time table, which went in force during the night of 21 may 1955, trains operating through the Western sectors of Berlin or to and from the Western sectors of the city must be puriously recombined assigned to a locomotive maintenance shop in the Western sectors of Berlin. These locomotives must have a so-called "locomotive pass" on which the names of the permanent crews of the locomotives are listed. A permanent crew must consist of only four locomotive engineers and four firemen. Recently, train personnel has also been recorded on locomotive passes. In this way, regular locomotive brigades have been formed. Nost of the personnel of these brigades live in West Berlin. The intention of this measure is to exclude railroad personnel living in East Berlin from entering the Western sectors of the city. 1
