1. [ ] Polish railway authorities frequently refused to accept Soviet military rail shipments from East Germany travelling eastward through Frankfurt/Oder. [ ] no Soviet shipments were accepted for a period of eight hours. A representative of the Soviet rail transportation authorities attempted to speak to a member of the Polish railway administrative office by telephone, but the Pole hung up the receiver shortly after being connected. [ ] trains were being accepted by the Polish railways, but in most cases with a delay of at least an hour.
