1. The attempts of the Accion Chilena Anticomunista (ACHA) to organize an intelligence service, as reported in [redacted] have ended in failure. At present no ACHA intelligence service exists, although the leaders are still interested in forming such a branch. Tentative plans call for the training and use for intelligence purposes of twenty-eight members from each of the five ACHA bases. Source believes, however, that not more than twenty-eight to thirty specially trained ACHA members would be utilized for this work.
2. The ACHA leaders are convinced that their organization has been effectively penetrated by members of the Communist Party of Chile. They consider it necessary to form an efficient counter- and positive intelligence service for use in the struggle against Communism.
