- The former synthetic gasoline factory at Politz (Police), which was dismantled after the war by the Soviets, has to date not been rebuilt, and will probably not be rebuilt at any time in the near future. Plans were drawn up to proceed with the reconstruction of the factory in 1949 and work was begun at that time. However, through the mismanagement of some of the directors, many new imported machines were destroyed, damaged, or sold as scrap. As a result, two of the men responsible were sentenced to death and the reconstruction of the factory was halted.
