1. In December 1950, the Ministry of Finance in Sofia acquired greater control over provincial finance than it had previously possessed. This was accomplished by transferring the finance offices of the okrug people's councils to the Ministry of Finance branch offices which were established in each okrug. The duties of the okrug people's councils' finance sections were assumed by the Ministry of Finance branch offices, and the personnel of these offices, with their dossiers, were likewise transferred and made responsible to the Ministry of Finance.
2. Although this change meant a transferral of responsibility for provincial auditing, the system did not change otherwise, and the methods used in carrying out provincial audits remained substantially the same. In addition, the okrug people's councils retained their finance sections which continued to work with the Ministry of Finance okrug branch offices, the latter informing the former of their work.
3. In addition to its finance section, the Khaskovo Okrug People's Council had six other sections: Directorate (sub-divided Personnel and Correspondence), Agriculture, National Health, National Education, Communal Farming, and Local Industry.
4. The Ministry of Finance branch office for Khaskovo Okrug served all the okoliyas in Khaskovo Okrug: Khaskovo, Kurdzhali, Krumovgrad, Momchilgrad, Svilengrad, Kharmanli, Ardino, and Zlatograd.

pare the funds in the safe with the financial records. Bank deposits, if any, would be verified. The auditor would call in the manager, accountant, and cashier to explain any equivocal points.

6. Audits were held either once or twice a year. Assignments were sent out from Sofia, and auditors were told to draw a travel advance and depart forthwith. If a large factory was to be examined, two or perhaps three auditors would be dispatched. But in most cases the auditors would work individually and would be expected to finish an audit in 18-20 days' time. After all records had been examined, the auditor would make a report, to which he could append any recommendations. In cases of embezzlement, the auditor was empowered to summon the Militia to arrest the culprit and search his home. Other types of discrepancies were merely noted by the auditor. The report would then be sent to the Okoliya People's Council for comment and transmittal to the Ministry of Finance. The decision as to prosecution, if necessary, was left for the Sofia headquarters of the Ministry of Finance.

7. The Khaskovo Okrug Ministry of Finance Office was located in a 2-story building in Svoda Square, the first floor of which was used by the State Petroleum Establishment, the Ministry of Finance branch office being confined to the second floor.
