Comments

His HPSCI Subcommittee has pursued Community usage of ADP in some considerable depth and will continue to do so, 1978.

His Subcommittee held several hearings on and produced a study on terrorism, 1978.

In addition to a deep interest in the uses to which computers can be put in support of intelligence and his concern that there is probably too much redundancy in the use of computers within the Community, Mr. Rose is fascinated with cognitive psychology. He has asked and will predictably continue to ask witnesses to comment on the degree to which their component has considered cognitive bias in the selection of their personnel as well as efforts which have been made to protect ourselves against the effects of cognitive biases in analysis.

Has had (but refused) opportunities to be briefed by CIA representatives in London and Lisbon, November, 1978.

Was briefed on the level of knowledge of Soviet use of and level of expertise in the field of parapsychology in which he has a deep interest, December, 1978.

SEVENTH DISTRICT

The 7th congressional district of North Carolina is the southern portion of the state's coastal region, the part of North Carolina most like the Deep South. Wilmington is an old Carolina coastal city that never became a major port—a would-be Charleston or Savannah. Favetteville. toastarty that never occure a major port—a would-be charleston or Savannah. Favetteville, the district's other population center, lies across the rather sparsely settled coastal plain to the west. The city's population exceeds only slightly that of adjacent Fort Bragg, the huge Army base (population 47,000), to which Favetteville owes much of its recent prosperity. Bragg is the home of the Army's 101st Airborne paratroopers, and nearby, along the garish strip highway with its X-rated drive-in movies and topless night clubs, is the nation's largest concentration of Vietnamese restaurants. Vietnamese restaurants.

The 7th has a fairly large percentage of blacks (26%), but its most notable minority consists of American Indians (7%). In fact, more Indians live here than in any other congressional district cast of the Mississippi. Most of them are the Lumbees of Rependicular, and their place in the inditional caste system of the South has always been unclear. Robeson is about one-third white, one-third black, and one-third Indian, and in the days of segregation the county maintained three school systems. Indians have had their own civil rights demonstrations, but they also have objected to having their children bused to go to school with blacks.

Like the Deep South, the 7th district has gyrated wildly in its presidential preference in the last three elections. In 1968 it was a near even split: Wallace finished first, but Nixon, in third place, was only 6% behind him. In 1972, McGovern lost some of the Humphrey votes, apparently because of his stand on military spending which did not sit well in Fayetteville or Fort Bragg; Nixon got 70% here. Four years later, the district had switched back to the Democrats, giving Jimmy Carter 67% of its votes.

Jimmy Carter 07% of its votes.

In congressional elections, the district has been more steady. The current Congressman, first elected in 1972, is Charles Rose III. Due to his associations with former Governor Terry Sanford—he worked for Sunford's law firm and supported his 1972 presidential bid—Rose has been considered something of a liberal, though he insists he is a conservative. Rose left Sanford's iaw firm in the 1960s to return to his home town of Tevetteville, where he became a local prosecutor. In 1970 he quit to run for Congress. The incumbent was Alton Lennon, age 64 and a former U.S. Senator who was appointed in 1953 and defeated for a full term in 1954. In the Senate, Lennon had hired as an aide Jesse Helms, later an ultraconservative Senator himself; in the House, Lennon was a solid conservative and member of the Armed Services Committee. By 1970, however, he was a poor campaigner, and Rose carried the counties around Fayetteville and wound up with 43% in the primary. So it was hardly a surprise when Lennon announced he would retire in 1972.

Rose did not succeed to the seat without a contest. In the 1972 runoff he beat state Representative Hector McGechy by a 55%-45% margin. But he seems to have made the seat safe. Two years later he beat McGechy again, this time by a 61%-39% margin; and he has had no trouble (81% in 1976) against Republican opponents. Rose was assigned initially to the griculture and House Administration Committees. He appears to be secure in his seat and, at 39, is likely to be a Congressional for a long time to come. is likely to be a Congressman for a long time to come.
