FRANCE: Tensions in the Coalition

The government won the support of both the Socialist and Communist contingents in the National Assembly earlier this week for its pledge to attack inflation. Communist Party leader Marchais warned, however, that his party does not accept the wage freeze portion of the government's anti-inflation program. France's largest labor confederation, which is dominated by the Communists, has asked its members to reject the wage freeze if it is enacted.

SOUTH KOREA: More Cabinet Changes

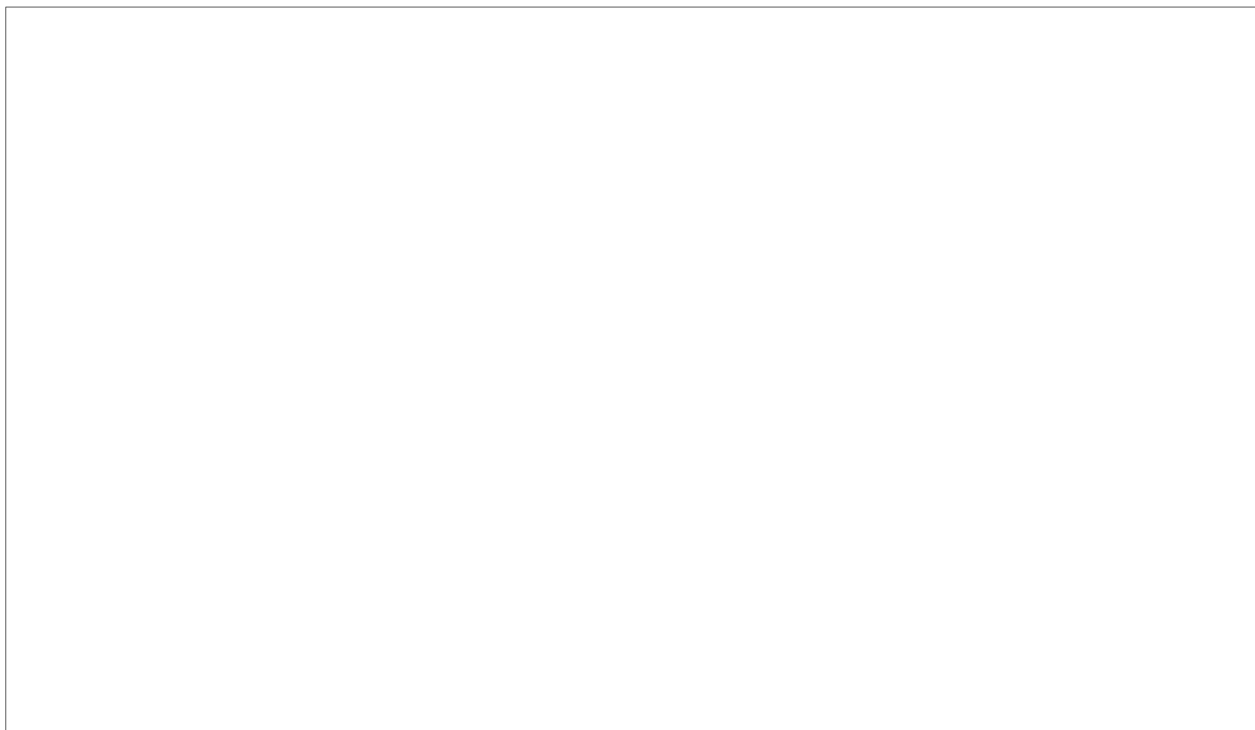

President Chun yielded to pressure from the opposition yesterday and replaced his Prime Minister and the Ministers of Finance, Justice, and Energy and Resources--the second major cabinet realignment stemming from the recent financial scandal. The new Prime Minister is Kim Sang Hyup, a widely respected scholar and administrator.

Comment: //Chun probably hopes the changes will be the last political measures he will have to take to clean up the scandal. His retention of the Deputy Prime Minister, who holds a key economic portfolio, presumably is aimed at maintaining confidence in the government's economic policy. The government's moves to cope with the economic impact of the scandal have kept damage to the nation's finances to a minimum, and the confidence of foreign lenders remains strong. Chun's handling of the scandal has forestalled serious dissident activity but has not dispelled widespread public cynicism toward his government.//
