A student of mine, [Redacted] is interested in a job at the CIA and took the test in January. Since then, not only has he not heard whether you want to hire him, he has not heard anything from the Agency at all. I know there is no reason to expect your bureaucracy to be faster than anyone else's, but this does seem to me to be unfortunately slow. [Redacted] is very able and had he not been sick for a month this Spring might well have other offers by this time.

Even if nothing can be done to speed up the process, perhaps applicants could be sent a letter every couple of months both to inform them of progress and to show them that the Agency is still very interested in them.

Cordially,

Contacted [Redacted] in Office of Personnel on 15 June. He investigated & reported back that [Redacted] had failed to send in his form. OP assumed he was no longer interested. Recruiters have been told to contact him in New York or at his home in Calif. I showed this info to [Redacted] on 15 June.
