USSR-Angola: All the Way with the MPLA

Recent substantial Soviet arms deliveries to the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola and harshor press treatment of the rival National Front indicate that Moscow is more firmly canting its lot with the Movement.

Soviet military shipments since May have included trucks, various armored vuhicles, artillory, grenades, machine guns, and small arms. The Soviets also are continuing to train substantial numbers of officers and troops of the Popular Movement in the USSR, East Germany, and the Congo.

25X1 The Soviet press has consistently accorded special praise to the Movement, but until recently it avoided direct attacks on the other liberation groups. In the wake of the recent fighting in Luanda, however, cial praise to the Movement, but until recently it avoided direct attacks on the other liberation groups. In the wake of the recent fighting in Luanda, however, the press has charged that the National Front is a client of Peking and the US, and has labeled it a "reactionary organization," whose members are "culprits for the death of hundreds of people."

Moscow probably still has not written off the prospect of a coalition government emerging in Angola. With the Popular Movement now enjoying a clear military advantage, however, the Soviets appear to have rising expectations that the Movement will have the dominant post-independence role.

Another Vacancy in Soviet Cultural Bureaucracy

Tass announced on July 18 that Deputy Minister of Culture Zinaida M. Kruglovs has been named chairman of the Union of Soviet Societies for Friendship and Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries. Kruglova vacates a post which she assumed only last November, shortly after the appointment of candidate Politburo member Petr Demichev as minister of culture.

Until last fall, Kruglova had been party socretary for ideology in the Leningrad Oblast party committee, where she conformed to Leningrad's longstanding reputation for toughness and orthodoxy in cultural and ideological affairs. Her appointment to the Ministry of Culture was thus viewed by some Soviet intellectuals as an effort to balance Demichev's more pragmatic approach.

During her short tenure at the ministry, Kruglova has had virtually no publicity. This will probably change with her new job which, though as generally powerless as that of a deputy culture minister, carries considerably more prestige and an opportunity for international public relations.

The 52-year-old Kruglova takes over her new post from Nina V. Popovi, 67, who is retiring. Popova's rank as full member of the Central Committee may be given to Kruglova at the next party congress in February. Kruglova is now a member of the Central Auditing Commission, a rank she attained by virtue of her former party post in Leningrad.

No replacement has yet been named for Kruglova in the ministry. If this does not occur soon, it will add one more to the growing number of vacancies in the party and government cultural/propaganda apparatus. The most important of these is Demichev's former post of party secretary for culture and propaganda, which he relinquished at the December 1974

Central Committee plenum. The leadership's failure to fill this and related lesser posts has resulted in an ad hoc approach to cultural affairs, characterized by arbitrariness and drift against a background of a general, but often inconsistent, crackdown on nonconformism.
