In his 25 years with the CIA Phillips rose from recruit to "contract man" to director of the Western Hemisphere division. In 1975 he retired to form an independent agency involved in CIA-related public relations activities. An amalgam of autobiography, espionage and CIA history, Phillips's book is predictable when he is denying CIA assassination plots or justifying intelligence work in the national interest. The real meat lies in the frank, closely detailed portrayal of major clandestine operations. Phillips saw Castro march into Havana, was in Mexico when Lee Harvey Oswald made his puzzling visit, directed covert operations in Chile shortly before Allende's overthrow. He was in the action in Lebanon, Brazil, Venezuela, Washington, D.C. There are as many twists and turns here as a spy thriller, only it's the real thing, with glimpses of Allen Dulles, JFK, Che Guevara, double agent Kim Philby, Howard Hunt, others.
