Introduction

The Guide to Substantive Positions at US Missions Abroad is intended to assist US Government analysts in identifying potential sources of information on foreign countries. For each country in which the United States maintains a diplomatic presence, the guide identifies each activity that is likely to be substantive and the controlling government department at the mission. The names of the persons currently responsible for the activities are not available.

Information in the guide is presented four ways, with each breakdown displayed in a separate section. The sections are:

- Section I: Listed by Department by Activity.
- Section II: Listed by Department, by Activity, and by Country.
- Section III: Listed by Department, by Country, and by Activity.
- Section IV: Listed by Country, by Department, and by Activity.

The guide should be useful for official travelers to identify persons with whom they share a professional interest. More can be learned about the officer's responsibilities and arrangements can be made to meet with the person during official visits by contacting the person's home agency or department in Washington.

The guide should also suggest locations from which information may be obtained that is a necessary input to intelligence assessments or other analyses. All requirements submitted to the US missions should flow through the official channel. The CIA analyst should contact his or her All-Source Requirements Officer in the Collection Requirements and Evaluation Staff, Room 3E58, Headquarters Building, or phone [redacted]. Other Intelligence Community analysts should make arrangements through the appropriate office within his or her organization.

This guide was compiled by the Director of Central Intelligence's (DCI) Economic Intelligence Committee. Additional copies may be obtained by writing to the Executive Secretary of the Economic Intelligence Committee, 3G00 Headquarters Building, Central Intelligence Agency, Washington, D.C. 20505, or by calling [redacted].
