DIANA HEARS

EXCERPTED

IN FROM THE COLD, OUT FOR THE STARDUST ...
And there's gnashing of bridgework at the Rough Rider Room this week, darlings. (Surely you know? That's where our finest spooks tip their suds ever since Chez O'Toole closed. The target of their wrath: "Remembrances of a CIA Wife," in the new Washingtonian mag. Bina Kiyonaga's tasty, tattily memoir of her late spy mate, rustled up with Rudy Maxa, makes the spy game sound so weird, with all the nitty-gritty about spouses and kids getting roped in as sources — and even, in South and Central America, priests. (The late Mr. Kiyonaga often got briefed in the confessional.) It's no good hoping it'll vanish with the spring thaw, darlings. Hollywood's in town right now, haggling to turn "Wife" into a "Movie of the Week."
