DIRECTORY OF IRANIAN CLERICS

25X1

INTRODUCTION This reference aid summarizes the political activities, positions, and alliances of individual Iranian clerics in the anti-Shah movement before the Islamic revolution and under the Khomeini regime.

Clerical Titles: The lowest title applied to Iranian Shia clerics is that of "hojjat ol-Eslam" (proof of Islam). That term and the more prestigious "ayatollah" (vestige of God) have traditionally been applied as tokens of respect by a cleric's followers and with the consensus of more senior clerics. The Khomeini regime also uses an intermediate title, "hojjat ol-Eslam val Moslemiin" (proof of Islam, light of Muslims) for several favored lower level clerics such as Consultative Assembly Speaker Rafsanjani and President Khamenei. "Seqat ol-Eslam" refers to a specialist in the lore of the Prophet Muhammad. "Ayatollah al-Ozma" (grand Ayatollah) is applied only to a handful of the most important Shia religious leaders.

Technical Details: The spelling of geographical and personal names may not always follow US Government usage. Often only one element of a compound personal name is in common use. More rarely used elements appear in parentheses, as in (Musavi-)Khomeini.

When known, dates are given for the period during which an individual has held a particular position. In many cases, however, only a single date, incomplete dates, or no date can be given. The following symbols and terms are used in individual listings:

o @ indicates a member of the Consultative Assembly (Majles). The 1st Majles served from mid-1980 to mid-1984, when the 2nd Majles took office. Often members were elected in interim elections and did not serve during the entire term of the 1st or 2nd Majles, but the specific dates of such partial terms are not noted. The initials IRP in this context indicate that the Majles member was a candidate supported by the Islamic Republic Party.

o The 1st Assembly of Experts, consisting of 70 clerical and lay members, revised the draft Islamic constitution in 1979. The 2nd Assembly of Experts, elected in late 1982, was formed to select a successor to Ayatollah Khomeini. The Assembly named Ayatollah al-Ozma Hosein Montazeri as the as the successor in late 1985, but it remains in session.

o F indicates an Imam Jomeh (Friday prayer leader). His location is included in parentheses. More than one Imam Jomeh may be known in large towns with several major mosques. In addition, two or more clerics--some of whom may be designated as "acting" prayer leaders--may use the same pulpit. To expand and solidify its control, the clerical regime has designated the Friday prayer leader as the central figure in towns and villages. Local political and security force leaders are expected to meet with the Friday prayer leader regularly to coordinate activities and to defer to his wishes. The regime exploits the weekly prayer service--which all citizens are expected to attend--to reinforce a popular sense of community under clerical leadership. Weekly sermons give a political and religious context in which official interpretations of current events, ideology, and policies are provided.

o KhK stands for Khomeini's personal representatives to specific locations, organizations, and institutions. They have a mandate to keep him informed and ensure that his directives are implemented.

o MoK stands for Montazeri's representatives, who serve a function similar to Khomeini's.
