THE PROFESSIONAL MEMBER -

May 15, 1979

In response to many requests, the Institute will establish a new classification among its membership beginning June 1st, 1979. This will be the Professional Member.

The purpose of Professional Membership is best described in the following:

1. To widen research into the application of methods and techniques developed by the Institute.
2. To extend more broadly the use of those applications by the Institute now in practice.
3. To provide the Institute with a greater data base than is now possible through the efforts of its internal staff and limited facilities.
4. To teach others such basic methods and techniques so as to stimulate investigation and interest in new and future potentials yet to be considered.

The Professional Membership is limited to those who are active in one of the various disciplines - the physicist, engineer, medical doctor, psychologist, psychiatrist, analyst, teacher, to name the most common. He has expressed an interest in the activities of the Institute, and wishes to test or employ the Institute methods in his own area of endeavor.

Thus, Professional Members fall into three categories, or combinations thereof:

- (A) Researcher: In which the Member, either on his own behalf or that of an organization with which he is associated, utilizes the basic methods and techniques of the Institute solely for the gathering of information and experience, with the intent of eventual publication of the results of such experimentation.
- (B) Practitioner: In which the Member is engaged in private and/or clinical practice, and employs the Institute methods and techniques in his relationship with his clients, including such specialization as may be available to suit his unique requirements.

- (C) Educator: In which the member is associated with a learning institute, and elects to include such methods and techniques in his teaching, either at an informational or practical level.

ORGANIZATION -

Professional Membership will be under the direction of the Professional Committee, who will in turn appoint their own chairman. The original Committee will be appointed by Robert Monroe, which will be active until the first annual Professional Conference. At such Conference each year, the Professional Committee will elect the Committee for the following year. The total number of Committee Members is limited to seven.

The Professional Member enjoys a special relationship with the Institute. He can use the Institute materials in his own practice or research either in the prescribed manner or through innovative approaches that he himself may develop. He may use such materials as are now inventoried, or obtain from the Institute special material to fit his particular requirements. He may, in particular cases, bring his client or patient to the Institute Center in Virginia for special sessions conducted by him, and utilizing the unique facilities available there. In such event, housing for both can be provided at the Center.

Most important, there is no requirement that he participate beyond those in his original application. He can remain passive and be only the recipient of information and research data as these are developed. In turn, he can join to whatever degree he chooses in the explorations of human consciousness instigated by the Institute.

The Professional Member receives these commitments from the Institute:

1. The privilege of utilizing various audio and other entrainment material developed by the Institute, on a one-to-one basis and solely by him or under his direct control, for the purpose stated in his Membership Application. However, such purpose may be added to or changed upon written request to the Institute. Such privilege will continue as long as he remains an Active Member in good standing.
2. Frequent reports on the research and other activities of the Institute and other organizations with related interests, including but not limited to the areas of his particular discipline.
3. Periodic research data in unprocessed form for consideration and evaluation as it may become available, from not only the Institute but from other organizations and individuals as well.

4. An Annual Professional Conference only for such membership, held at the new Institute Training and Research Center in Virginia. During this meeting, new Institute techniques and data will be presented to Professional Members, including training in the application thereof. The balance of the Conference will consist of reports and discussion by such Members.
5. The privilege of utilizing the Institute training and research facilities in Nelson County, Virginia for one-to-one sessions with special clients, conducted by the Professional Member. Under this section are included use of CHEC units, bio-monitoring, M & T applications, with audio and videotape recording.
6. Upon approval or recommendation by the Institute or the Institute Professional Committee, attendance at various meetings, conferences, seminars or similar events sponsored by other organizations as a representative or on behalf of the Institute.

The Professional Member makes these commitments to the Institute:

1. That he will keep reasonable records of his work with Institute material and methods, and transmit a copy of such records and an evaluation thereof to the Institute on a regular basis. The frequency of such reporting will vary according to use, it is understood.
2. That he will submit to the Institute for approval any material he may write for publication regarding his work with Institute methods prior to publication. The purpose of this commitment is not to avoid adverse comment, but to insure accuracy in content. Therefore, such approval cannot be withheld for any other reason.
3. That he will not reproduce or duplicate any program or training material obtained by him from the Institute, or permit any other person to do so.
4. That he will utilize such Institute program or training material only in the manner stated in his Membership application unless he receives written approval to do otherwise. Such material will be employed only by him or by a person or persons trained by him and under his direct supervision.
5. That he will keep careful control of such material to preserve its integrity and to prevent unauthorized use of it by others.

6. That if he terminates his membership in the Institute or his membership is terminated by the Institute for good and valid reason, he will return promptly any program or training material he has obtained from the Institute. However, this does not include any records or reports he may have gathered during his membership period.
7. That he will permit the Institute to disseminate any such reports he may make regarding his work with Institute materials, unless he specifically requests confidentiality. In the latter event, his reports will remain strictly a part of Institute data and remain in the Institute archives.
8. That he will co-operate with the Institute in the evaluation of information and data sent to him for such purpose, and respond within a reasonable period with oral or written comments.

MEMBERSHIP FEES -

At this time, the Institute obtains its support from members and others who subsidize its research and other activities. Professional Members are asked to be a part of such support. Thus all membership fees and other charges are based upon a total cost of the maintenance of the Institute rather than a single item.
