Site involves a large structure on a high piece of terrain in an area that is "like" being up in the mountains--dramatic and abrupt terrain relief, along with green, winding valley areas. Structures on terrain features are not uncommon in this area. Structure is masonry, with slate, tile, scalloped, dished, and ribbed portions. There is a possible oriental feel to this site. This does not feel like a technical site; there is sense of a wall of a structure integrated into an abrupt drop-off or cliff. People involved suggest an AOL/A/S of Tibetan/Nepalese monastery; short, coppery-complexioned people with very little dark hair on their heads sit in a circle communicating, discussing, "like" negotiating. There is a concept of "meeting." There is more than one faction/interest group represented. Not everybody comes from the same place, though they are all the same race/nationality. Some of them belong with the structure; others come from outside it, most from quite some a distance away. It's "like" they gather at a summons but they're not subservient; they come because they choose to come to work things out, though they have a healthy respect for those who do the summoning as someone with power to do a good deal of mischief if they were so inclined. There is a further sense of being drawn from various regions of the country. This location is a sort of central "rallying point." The air is fairly high altitude sort of air, crisp and clean.
