2. Mr. Kennan said that he felt we should include Mr. Alan Wardwell on the committee as certain arrangements had already been made with him by Mr. Wasson. It was, therefore, agreed that the committee should be composed originally of the following individuals or as many of them as would serve:

- a. William Henry Chamberlain, President
- b. Gordon Wasson, Treasurer
- c. William Y. Elliot
- d. Eugene Lyons
- e. Kurt Reissinger
- f. Alan Wardwell
- g. Matthew Woll

3. It was agreed that Mr. Kennan would within the next few weeks speak with Messrs. Wasson, Wardwell and Reissinger and inform them that Mr. Chamberlain would approach them about the formation of the committee which had his, Mr. Kennan's, blessing. Mr. Kennan would ask Mr. Wasson if he would be willing to serve as treasurer of the committee and, if he would not, would ask him to suggest someone, perhaps Mr. Wardwell or perhaps someone else, to act in this capacity. A representative of OPC would approach Mr. Chamberlain and request him to act as president and as such to make an official approach to the prospective committee members. It was agreed that the members of the committee should be told the truth about who was behind the project and what its real purpose was.

Mr. Kennan who was seeing [redacted] in the afternoon would tell him that he knew of some private citizens who were interested in the Russian problem and that he felt that funds might be available to help continue [redacted]
