2. CHINESE NATIONALIST AIRCRAFT MAY USE SOUTH KOREAN AIRFIELDS

	Chinese Nationalist long-range recon- naissance aircraft may make use of South Korean airfields as terminals for flights over Communist China, these aircraft would penetrate far inland and
north	into Communist China.
	no confirmation of this information, but mmander in chief of the Nationalist air force, Generger" Wang, recently visited South Korea and that high-level	meetings have taken place.

Comment

Seoul and Taipei have been advocating closer military co-operation and have publicly indicated a desire for a military alliance. Incidents resulting from deeper aerial penetrations of Communist China would serve the interest of both the Nationalists and South Koreans in maintaining a state of tension in the Far East.

Quwatli's information may be based on new threats by the Arab Socialists to overthrow him if the death sentences of the three rightist Syrian Social Nationalist Party members involved in a political assassination last year are not carried out. In early August, Quwatli said he would resign rather than approve their executions, but acceded to a compromise which has delayed the final decision.

A coup attempt by the Arab Socialists is a constant threat. They are the targets of the conservative senior officer group which forced the ouster of chief of staff Shuqayr, and they would almost certainly attempt a coup if they felt any serious moves against them were imminent.

Communists are likely to try to convince them that China's claim to the disputed territory is at least equally valid. Peiping has consistently refused to recognize the 1941 boundary line because it was negotiated by a Chinese government which was not properly representative of the "Chinese people."
